FREE EDUCATIONAL POULTRY DEMONSTRATION

NAPANEE ARMOURIES, NOV. 1st and 2nd, 1922

Through the kindness of Mr. M. B. Mills a very instructive crate fattening exhibit will be shown at the Educational Poultry Demonstration in the Armouries. The exhibit will consist of birds which have been crate fattened three weeks, birds which have been crate fattened one week, and birds which have not been crate fattened at all. All these birds are of the same age, and are the same breed. Consequently a fair comparison may be made of the advantages of crate fattening at different stages. A record showing the amount and cost of feed consumed, the gain in weight of the live birds, and the profit to be made from crate fattening will be attached to the exhibit so that farmers and poultrymen may see how many dollars and cents the value of crate fattening. One dressed bird, at the different stages of fattening, will be shown immediately beside the crate for the inspection of the public. This feature of the demonstration is well worth seeing, and should impress the public with the importance and value of properly crate fattening and preparing their birds for market.

Killing and plucking demonstrations will be held afternoon and evening on both days of the demonstration. These are being conducted by an expert from Toronto and he will endeavor to show how to properly kill and dress birds for market. The idea of these two features, namely crate fattening and killing and plucking, is to educate the people to prepare their birds for market in such a way that they will receive the highest possible price. And the demonstration has been arranged by the Napanee Poultry Association to take place one month before the Egg Case, in order that people receiving proper instruction on the fattening and marketing of fowl may go home and put the knowledge into practice, come back to Napanee with their birds and receive value in dollars and cents for what they have learned.

Farmers and poultrymen interested in buying proper breeding stock for their flocks should plan to attend the demonstration as there will be offered for sale about 200 cockerels and pullets of the standard breeds and the more popular varieties. It is possible to get this breeding stock properly distributed over the County, it would tend to greatly raise the standard of poultry in Lennox and Addington.

The Dominion Poultry Husbandman has arranged with the Division of Extension and Publicity of the Central Experimental Farm to bring an exhibit which will occupy a space 25 ft. long and about 10 ft. wide showing modern poultry equipment. This ought to be of great interest to everyone interested in poultry, as the exhibit is a brand new and has never been shown before in Canada.

Another important feature of the demonstration is conducted by Guelph College, showing the proper method of culling birds for laying. Everyone interested in increasing egg production should be particularly interested in this feature of the demonstration. Mr. Francis, of the Guelph College, will also take up another line of work, namely, poultry diseases. He will endeavour to explain how to combat the more common poultry diseases, which in some cases have made serious inroads in the flocks of the County.

The Live Stock Branch, Ottawa, are showing motion pictures each evening, featuring certain phases of the poultry industry. There are other branches of the poultry industry we have not mentioned through lack of space. For official programme see "The Beaver" and "The Express." Everyone interested in increasing egg production should be particularly interested in this feature of the demonstration.

Everyone interested in poultry should attend this demonstration as it is purely educational and is bound to be of value in assisting them to become better poultrymen.

LENNOX INSTITUTE

The teachers of Lennox held their annual meeting in N. C. I. on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 12th and 13th.

About one hundred teachers were in attendance.

Rev. A. H. Foster, of Trinity church, Napanee, kindly conducted the opening exercises. He called upon the teachers to repeat in concert with him the Twenty-third Psalm, after which he gave a very fine dissertation on the twelfth of Ecclesiastes, which he styled a Hebrew poem, then offered prayer.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted.

Communications from the Ontario Educational Association, and from Mr. Chas. B. Fraser re the Northern Ontario disaster, the School, the Canadian Teacher, and the Ontario Federation of Home and School Associations, were read.

Miss J. Dennee was appointed to take up voluntary subscriptions for teachers who suffered from fire in Northern Ontario.

Mr. Trenouth was appointed to take up subscriptions for The School. The fee was raised to 50 cents all teachers were asked to send for Teachers' club rates.

A grant of $5 was made to the O.E.A.

Mr. Corkill, B.A., LP.S., spoke on the Junior Red Cross Journal and advised teachers to secure it for pupils to read.

Mr. Corkill's report was read and the auditors, Misses Hawley and Denison, found it correct.

A Nominating Committee, and a committee to report Resolutions were named.

Miss G. Crozier gave an interesting report of delegate to the O.E.A.

Thursday afternoon's session opened with a violin solo by Miss Dorothy Hawley and a vocal solo by Miss Mary Daly.

In the President's address, Miss Margaret Mitchell, Newburgh, spoke on "Sources of Inspiration in Teaching." The three fundamentals in education are the teacher, the curriculum, and the school houses and the greatest of these is the teacher. Great help may be derived from reading Histories of Education. Miss Mitchell paid a very fine tribute to our late inspector, Mr. D. A. Nesbit, who, while teaching rules of grammar in English grammar, never forgot to uphold the highest ideals of life. Such men as he and the Principal of the Toronto Normal School, will long be vital forces and challenges to efficient service in the lives of the many teachers who came in touch with them.

Inspiration may be derived also from a session of the various departments of our work, from Teachers' Institutes, from results of our teaching, from our holiday reading, from the lives of Great Teachers who was called the Ideal Teachers and from Whom all inspiration comes.

Mr. Corkill complimented our Inspector, Mr. Corkill, on the improvements in educational affairs of our county, especially because we have qualified teachers in nearly all our schools.

Mr. Corkill was warmly received and proceeded to give the Inspector's address. He wished to help the new teachers especially so spoke on promotion exams. He will be guided before the pupil is ready, on entrance examinations for pupils who are too young and immature children. Give them the hope that the day would come when defectives would be given special training.

Mr. Corkill then spoke on the right and wrong use of textbooks. He found it necessary to again call the teachers' attention to the importance of filling in complete reports in registers at the end of the year and of enrolment of pupils early. He wished reports sent in promptly.

He advises teachers to take courses in summer schools which are a great source of inspiration.

Mr. W. Morden, N.C.I., expressed his pleasure at being given this opportunity to introduce himself as the teachers, and kindly promised his aid at any of the future meetings of the Institute.

Mr. A. F. Hagerman, Normal School, Peterboro, gave two very interesting talks. He criticised our educational curriculum which requires every pupil, irrespective of natural ability or educational advantages, to take the same course in drawing, and read the same mark of proficiency. Dr. Morden said there must be a strong breakaway from our formal type of training. There should have an educational democracy where every boy and girl should have equal advantages to have their faculties developed. He believed strongly in vocational training.

The teachers spent a very enjoyable social hour during which ice cream and cake were served and all greatly enjoyed the community singing led by Mr. W. J. Mantinaw. A request was expressed that all the teachers did not remain for the social hour.

The evening entertainment was given on Thursday, in the town hall. Mr. E. J. Corkill, LP.S., acting as chairman. The program consisted of an instrumental solo by Miss Hawley, a violin solo by Mrs. C. Wilson, a reading by Miss K. Wilson, Strathcona, and a vocal solo by Miss F. Dwyer.

Each of these ladies kindly responded to an encore.

The main feature of the evening entertainment was a lecture on "The Days of Our Grandfathers," by Mr. S. Herrington, K.C. The audience gave rapt attention throughout.

Mr. Corkill, moving a vote of thanks, gave it as his opinion that this was one of the best, if not the best, ever given by the Teachers' Association.

On Friday morning Mr. G. V. McLean, M.A., N.C.I., at the request of the teachers, gave two very helpful lessons in arithmetic, on percentage and discount, and in doing so offered many helpful suggestions.

He urged the teachers to make the pupils think and do the work mentally as much as possible. Concentration of thought is the secret of all learning. Avoid the mechanical way; reverse the question to prove his answer. Have the pupils read the question thoroughly, and ask "whether is worth doing at all, is worth doing well," stop all slovenly work and insist on correct statements and on proving the answers; but never allow pupils to work for an answer given in a text-book. Increase the difficulty gradually, make haste slowly, and lead pupils up to the correct conclusions. Use a variety and concrete examples to keep up the interest.

The demonstration in Physical Culture by Miss McLaughlin's class and a talk on Primary Work by Miss Hawley, were especially interesting, as were also a lesson in Physical Geography, by Mrs. Fairbairn, and a talk on Stories and How to Tell Them, by Miss Crozier.

The officers for the next year are:

President—Miss J. Dennee.
Vice-Pres.—Miss Edna Magee.
Sec.-Treas.—Miss Daly.

Delegates to O. E. A.—Misses Breault and Sheridan.

Members of Executive—Misses McLean, Trenouth, Andrews, Earl, Dr. Morden, and Misses Mitchell, Mair, and Wilson.

Auditors—Misses Hawley and Denison.

The Secretary's salary was increased to $90.

Mr. Trenouth moved a vote of thanks to all who had helped to make this programme a success. Carried.

The Association expressed their willingness to visit some school or institute in lieu of the regular convention next year, if the Executive wished to make such an arrangement.

Miss Mitchell, the retiring President, expressed her appreciation of the help given by the Executive, and tendered her personal thanks to the Musical Committee.

Miss Dennee, the new President, was then called to the chair.

Moved by Mr. McLean, and seconded that the secretary be authorized to pay all the expenses of this Association, and that the institute extend thanks to the Board of Education for the use of the hall, N.C.I., and to all who took part in the evening program. Carried.

The meeting closed with God Save the King.

E. HARRISON,
Sec'y.-Treas.

TAMWORTH

The funeral of the late James Aylesworth, of all friends, was held Rev. Mr. Clark and Rev. Mr. Rorke, his former pastors, officiating, the funeral was very largely attended. The Masons of Napanee and Tamworth had charge of the arrangements. The pall bearers were all friends of the deceased by people of all classes. He gave good advice to many people and had under his control ten different schools.

The death occurred of John O'Brien, one of our business men, who has conducted a shoe shop here for the last thirty years. The funeral took place to the Roman Catholic cemetery. Rev. Father Cullen officiating. Calvin Wiser, Hiram Keech and wife, Kingston; Dr. Young and wife, Camden East, and a large number from Napanee were present at the funeral.

Mrs. Mitchell, of Massachusetts, arrived here in time for the funeral of her father, the late James Aylesworth.

GET READY FOR THE CHASE

SPECIAL TRAIN FOR HUNTERS

The open season for hunting deer and moose in Northern Ontario is rapidly approaching. The districts of the French and Mattawa rivers, Nov. 5th to Nov. 20th inclusive; north and west of these rivers, Oct. 25th to Nov. 20th inclusive. North of the Transcontinental Railway line the season is from Sept. 15th to Nov. 15th, inclusive.

The Canadian National Railways traverse the finest hunting territory in this country. This country, with its special and regular train service, makes "the Natural Way" the premier line for the hunter. Districts around here are vast there is game for everyone.

The selection of grounds is a most important matter, and one which requires careful study. The territory reached by the Canadian National lines north of Toronto is already a favorite one, but the new country east and west of Capreol is as yet comparatively little known to the hunter, and should, therefore, be highly attractive to the follower of the deer and moose.

The Canadian National Railways are providing special train service, which with regular trains will meet all requirements. Trains will be operated as follows:

Leave Toronto Union Station 11.15 p.m., Oct. 31st, for Capreol and intermediate points, and 11.15 p.m., Nov. 2nd, 3rd, and 4th for Key Jct. and intermediate points. The usual ample accommodation of sleeping cars, baggage cars and coaches will be provided.

The Annual Hunters' Leaflet issued by the Canadian National Railways is now ready for distribution, and may be obtained on application to agent of the company, or write General Passenger Department, Room 607, Royal Bank Bldg., Toronto. 46-c

How Clothing and Furnishing sales are increased

by Long Distance

Some quotations from recent reports:

"Long Distance brought us so much business that we expect to enlarge our factory."

"Tried Station-to-Station service and find it very satisfactory for selling goods to distant points."

"Thanks to Long Distance we are able to carry on without a large stock of goods. We call up wholesalers for our needs."

"We call up customers in outside towns and make appointments for trying on."

A well-known firm of Ottawa retailers writes "We often use Long Distance in preference to writing."

We can tell you how to apply Long Distance to almost any business

HOG GRADING COMMENCES ON OCTOBER 30, 1922

The regulations under which the official grading of hogs will be undertaken have been approved by Council as submitted after final agreement by all interests represented by the Joint Swine Committee. The swine graders appointed through the Civil Service Commission following the grading examinations have reported for duty to the Dominion Live Stock Branch.

The Honourable W. R. Motherwell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, announces that the hog grading regulations will be made effective on October 30th, 1922. In the meantime, the new hog grading staff is being given a thorough course of instruction at the Toronto stockyards, so that the official grading regulations as established will be uniformly applied at all stockyards and abattoirs in Canada.

Standard grading equipment is being adopted and is already installed at several stockyards where preliminary grading tests are being conducted and the necessary adjustments to expidite the grading and movement of hogs being made. Experimental work in car-tagging for co-operative shipments providing for the identification of individual farmer's hogs is in its final stage and the Live Stock Commissioner will announce an approved identification mark simultaneous with the inauguration of grading.

Explorer's Dreams.

The intrepid Captain Amundsen has changed his plans for his flight across the North Pole, and intends to land in Spitzbergen instead of Cape Columbia. We all hope and believe that he will accomplish his feat in safety, and he himself is optimistic, but one cannot help recalling a certain old dame whose optimism gradually faded away.

She was on a liner, and she bothered the captain by her continual questions.

"Where are we going to land, captain?" she asked.

He told her. And next day, having forgotten the place, she asked again.

"Where are we going to land, captain?" she said.

Once more he obliged. And yet a third time the name slipped her memory, so that on the following morning she repeated the well worn query.

"Where are we going to land, captain?"

Still patient, he repeated his information. That night there was a storm. The boat rolled and rocked, and great waves struck her. Suddenly a muffled figure tottered towards the captain.

"Captain," gasped a voice out of the darkness, "are you sure?"

Amundsen, however, is sure, so we will not worry. What worries me far more is thinking of the effect on his diet. If you want to know what hunger is, try the frozen North, and see how you like the doubtful diet which it provides! A slice of penguin and a whale chop do not form the most appetising meal in the world, not even if a hard dog-biscuit is added.

Sir Ernest Shackleton used to relate a delightful yarn bearing on this subject. He was approached one day by a gushing lady, who immediately tackled him about his voyages.

"I always think," she said, "that one must have wonderful dreams while leading that kind of life!"

"Beautiful dreams, indeed, admitted Sir Ernest.

"Oh, do tell me," she cried, "what you used to dream about in the Antarctic?"

"Treacle pudding!" replied Shackleton.

Preached to Royalty.

King George, Queen Mary and Princes Henry and George were present at the service in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace on Sunday morning, August 6, which Rev. Dr. Cody, of St. Paul's Church, Toronto, preached. This honor is a unique one for a Canadian clergyman, Dr. Cody recently preached at St. Paul's Cathedral.

MINIMUM WAGE LEGISLATION

ELIZABETH P. MacCALLUM, M.A.

Alberta is now the seventh province of the Dominion that has committed itself to policy of governmental regulation of wages. In British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario government regulation is well under way. In Alberta, Quebec, Nova Scotia, the requisite legislation has been enacted, but no steps have yet been taken to enforce it. Alberta has not yet had time to take action; Nova Scotia and Quebec are pausing to see how the plan has now lasted for three years. Action will probably be all the more effective for the delay, for these two provinces will soon have a wealth of experience in other parts of the Dominion to guide them, when they begin to enforce their Minimum Wage Acts.

There is a general conviction throughout Canada that some governmental action should be taken to protect workingmen from each other and from exploitation by cheap employers. That is to say, there is a large percentage of our workingwomen who are entirely dependent upon their own earnings, and it is felt that the right of these women to a living wage should be upheld in the face of the fact that many semi-dependent women are naturally willing to work for less than a living wage. Minimum wage laws in Canada, then, have been passed largely with the aim in view of making it illegal for an employer to pay or a female worker to accept less than a certain rate of wages, deemed by the Wages Board to approximate to a fair standard of living. British minimum wage legislation applies to men as well as women, but in Canada, whether wisely or not, little has been said about protecting that fluctuating, vague and inarticulate body of men workers which is fortunately smaller here than in any other countries. In all countries where minimum wage legislation has been enacted, the ultimate aim of the legislator is to create decent standars of living where they do not exist, and thus give to all classes of workers a sense of self-respect which will in time engender enough independence of spirit to enable them to look after themselves. That self-respect is conspicuously lacking among those workers whose standards are still of the lowest order. It is found that many such workers do not appear to care whether their wages are raised or not. Their indifference is born of physical undernourishment, and applied to almost all phases of their existence. It is to the advantage of the workers, of the province, and of individual employers as well, that apathy of this kind be done away with.

British Columbia has had the longest experience of any Canadian province in the field of minimum wage legislation. Industries have been dealt with one by one, until wages have been regulated in almost every industry in which women are largely employed. Wages for adult workers vary from $12.75 to $15.50 per week, representing often an increase of about 25 per cent. Hours have been shortened, so that forty-eight is regarded as a normal week. British Columbia's experience tends to refute the opinion held by many that a minimum wage is apt to become the maximum and so defeat its own purpose. In 1920 average wages in different industries were found to exceed the minimum by as much as $3.19, $1.58, $2.64, $2.58 and $4.43 per week. In Saskatchewan almost half of the laundry workers are receiving more than the minimum, while about two-thirds of the workers in shops and stores are in a similar position.

The Wage Boards of Manitoba and Ontario have made a large number of awards, and are experimenting in differential wages according to localities according to size. Their awards are not generally as high as those in Saskatchewan and British Columbia, but by the use of the informal conference with employers and employees, they are making a valuable addition to New Zealand's experience in minimum wage regulation.

Book Tastes In British Columbia.

We find that historical romances are popular with most readers. With that in mind, we supplement the Government library from our small private supply. For instance, with fiction such as the "Scarlet Pimpernel," we followed with a "Tale of Two Cities." A year, and our library contained the most interesting of Marie Antoinette, which was much appreciated by those who had read the other books dealing with the French period. The woman's story of the black Bartholomew gave birth to a real interest in the religious struggle that convulsed Europe in the sixteenth century. We found many of our members became anxious to gain more knowledge of European history.—From "Travelling Libraries and the Open Shelf," by Mary Ritchie in the Manitoba Free Press.

Less Work at Arsenal.

The Dominion arsenal at Quebec, employing about 250 hands, will close down every Saturday until the 31st of March next, according to the latest orders from Ottawa. It was a question of discharging a number of the old hands or keeping the present number in employment until the end of the fiscal year, about March 31st next, but closing down on Saturdays, was the policy adopted by the Government.

WILSON'S HARDWARE.

THE ... FRONT CITY.

Inventor Says Toronto City Had Right to Name.

There will be many claimants for a share in the fame arising from the invention of the telephone by Alexander Graham Bell, but the relation of Brantford is highly important and well defined. The "Telephone City" honestly says its name through the operations that led, in 1874, and again in 1876, of Dr. Bell, the Scottish scientist, who spent many years in Canada, and died even more in the United States. The telephone inventor first came to Brantford with his father in 1870, but from 1872 for a number of years he lived at odd times in Boston.

"Brantford is justified in calling herself the Telephone City" because the telephone originated there," in the words of Dr. Bell himself. "It was invented in Brantford at Tutela Heights in the summer of 1874. Boston is also justified in her claim to be 'the birthplace of the telephone,' for it was there that the telephone first acquired a real practical existence and first actually spoke. It was born at 109 Court street, Boston, on June 3, 1875, and speech sounds were heard from it very shortly afterward. The Brantford claim dates from 1874 and the Boston claim from 1875.

"The Dominion Telegraph Company of Canada very kindly placed its lines at my disposal for experimental purposes. In August, 1874, somewhere about the 10th of that month, we connected up Paris and Brantford, eight miles apart, and speech was transmitted a distance of several miles for the first time. A second experiment was made between Brantford and Mount Pleasant, a distance of five miles, and an exhibition was given from my father's house at Tutela Heights.

"It was about a quarter-mile from the house to the nearest telegraph line. We cleaned the town out of stovepipe wire and placed it on the fence from my father's house and then attached it to the telegraph wires leading into Brantford. Then I had some friends in Brantford who spoke, sang and recited into the membrane telephone while a large number of guests at my father's house at Tutela Heights listened to the transmission. So these experiments at Brantford were the first experiments that were really successful in transmitting speech from one place to another at a distance, but they were all one-sided, not reciprocal. The first reciprocal communication occurred after my return to Boston in October, 1876."

Old residents of Brantford still recall the young Scotsman as he drove about the city with his pony-cart and the apparatus with which the future of the great invention was then regarded. It is related that one merchant was offered a half-interest in the invention for $10,000. Modern Brantford has made amends by the erection of the magnificent memorial in the central portion of the city, one of the finest achievements of W. S. Allward, the Toronto sculptor, and giving permanence in bronze to the very idea, wrought by Edwin Markham, the American poet, in a remarkable tribute to Bell a few years ago, when he said:

"Bell sheared the cipher and the sign,
And with a running nearer the divine
Lets out across the void man's living voice
To sorrow or rejoice."

Japs in B. C. Fishing.

The officials of the Dominion Fishery Department at Vancouver have been instructed not to increase the number of fishing licenses to Japanese fishermen. The number restricted to that issued in the season of 1920-21. This action has come too late to save the Orientalising of the British Columbia fishing industry, but already it is acting as an irritant on Japanes penetrators.

An official at the Japanese Consulate-General, at Ottawa, Mr. Koaki Mizusawa, went to the United States recently and there, we are told, declared that "The Canadian anti-Japanese bars are more cruel, in my opinion, than the California anti-Japanese laws." The basis for this allegation seems to be complaints from Japanese fishermen at the coast respecting the restrictions on fishing licenses. But the Jap fishermen set about two-thirds of the licenses issued. How many do they want? There are about 5,000 Japs in the fishing business, and they can make it profitable when white men meet only a loss, because of their living and operating standards.

More Suns.

Twin suns, fifty-two quadrillion miles from the earth, have been discovered by Dr. J. S. Plaskett, director of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory at Victoria, B.C., through the observatory's big 72-inch reflector telescope. Scientists herald the discovery as the outstanding astronomical achievement of recent times. The suns have been named Plaskett, after their discoverer.

The light, which, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second started from these suns five thousand years before there were any credible human history on the earth, is reaching here only to-day. An airplane traveling from this earth at the rate of 200 miles an hour would require 30,000,000 years to reach the twin suns. They burn at a temperature of 30,000 degrees Fahrenheit as they whirl around one another. One, the more massive, is seventy-five times the bulk of our sun. The lesser is sixty-three times heavier. One is 15,000 times as bright as the sun, and the other 12,000 times as bright. Plaskett is more than five times as large as any other known heavenly body.

Prof. Harold Jacob, of Columbia University, noted astronomical authority, declares it the "most remarkable investigation and discovery"; it is outstanding among recent astronomical investigations, he says, and declares that the measurements recorded by Dr. Plunkett must be accepted as most reliable.

Bliss Carman's Historic Poem

An interesting part of the ceremonies at the dedication of the memorial hall to David Thompson, one of the most famous of Canadian explorers, was the reading of an original poem by Bliss Carman, which we here reproduce:—

A grey coat boy from London
At fourteen came over the sea,
To a lonely post on Hudson Bay,
To serve the H. B. C.;
A seeker of knowledge, dreamer of dreams,
And a doer of deeds was he.

Before his feet lay a continent,
Untraversed, unsapped, ungleaned;
The whisper of the mysterious North,
The lure of the unknown West,
Called to him with a siren's voice
That would not let him rest.

'Twas but a step from the factor's door,
And the wilderness was there;
Rivers stretching a thousand miles,
Lakes for his thoroughfare,
And forests fresh from the hand of God
Waiting his will to dare.

Plains that dripped in the edge of the sky,
Untracked from rim to rim;
The sorcery when the sun was high
On ranges far and dim;
The summer morns and the winter nights,
They laid their spell on him.

Where did they lead, those waterways?
Where did they end, those plains?
And what is the joy of the wilderness,
Only its lover attains?
Ask little Whitethroat, Killdeer,
Who sings through the soft grey rains.

Wherever they led, whatever the end,
This lad must find and know.
With pole and paddle and slender birch,
On snowshoes over the snow;
With saddle and pack and pony track,
'Twas his dream and delight to go.

From the Churchill to the Assiniboine,
And up the Saskatchewan;
Back and forth through all the North,
His purpose drove him on,
Making a white man's trail for those
Who should come when he was gone.

So the days grew years and the cares of life,
Without reward or renown;
No heed of self, no greed for self,
Nor the idle ease of town,
Till he came at last to the barrier
Where the wheeling sun went down.

There the enormous ranges stood,
Forbidding, against the sky,
Where only the bear and the bighorn climbed
And the eagle's brood could fly;
His was the foot must find a road
For the world to enter by.

Up he followed the azure thread
Of the winding bow for guide,
By rapid and reach and shingly beach,
Then over the great divide;
Then he saw a river broad and strong
Swing past in a silver tide.

Down through a maze of canyon walls
He watched the mighty stream
Sweep on in conquering plentitude
With arrowy flight and gleam,
And knew that he had found at last
The river of his dream.

And here his house was builded;
Here let us stand and say,
Here was a man—full sized—whose fame
Shall never pass away
While the stars shine and the rivers run
In the land of the Kootenay.

Why Cliffs Crumble.

At any seaside place where there are high cliffs you will come across places where tons of rock and earth have given way during the winter's storms.

It is, of course, the force of the sea's thundering blows that has caused these miniature landslides, but the waves would do comparatively little damage to our coasts if it were not for the action of small creatures.

Look at the surface of the cliffs a foot or so above the sand, and you will find a number of holes drilled in their base. These are the work of shell-fish of different kinds. Just how they manage to bore deeply into the hardest rocks is not known, but it is supposed that they secrete an acid which has the effect of softening the stone.

If you come across a piece of stone containing several holes, it is gradually weaken the rock until, honeycombed with their holes, it gives way under the sea's pounding.

Many of our cliffs are composed almost entirely of the fossilized shells of sea creatures which lived millions of years ago. Molluscs built them up, and now other molluscs are destroying them.

A Hearty Old Man.

Although he is now in his 101st year, Anthony Marsell, who lives with his son, James, in the second concession of Matilda township, Dundas county, Ontario, is hoeing corn and doing other work about the farm daily, and last winter he insisted upon splitting wood and performing other chores. None of his faculties are impaired, save his hearing, which is slightly defective.

COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS FOR TAXES

County of Lennox and Addington,
To Wit :

By virtue of a warrant under the hand of the Warden and seal of the County of Lennox and Addington, bearing date the Tenth Day of July, A.D., 1922, and to me directed, commanding me to levy upon the lands mentioned in the following list for arrears of taxes due thereon, and the costs as therein set forth.

I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that unless the said arrears and costs are sooner paid, I shall proceed to sell the said lands, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the aforesaid taxes and costs, at the Court House, in the Town of Napanee, on WEDNESDAY, the 25th DAY OF OCTOBER, A.D., 1922, beginning at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, and in compliance with the Assessment Act.

Should any of the aforementioned lands remain unsold they will be again offered at an adjourned sale to be held on Wednesday, the 22nd day of November, for any purpose they will bring. The municipalities directly concerned give notice of their intention to purchase, if taxes are not fully covered, or for any sum they may deem advisable.

The public will please remember that this is a strictly CASH sale. Private cheques will n t be accepted unless MARKED by the bank upon which, they are drawn and must be at par here.

Non-patented, or any lands on which the Crown has an interest will be sold subject to those provisions.

W. J. SHANNON,
Treasurer of the County of Lennox and Addington.

Dated at Napanee this 10th day of July, 1922.

Our Humorist Visits England

The House of Commons is commodiously situated in London by the River Thames. There is a handsome legislative chamber attached to the premises—or so antiquaries assert—but the principal features of the House are the large lunch-room on the western side, the large tea-room on the eastern, the series of smaller luncheon-rooms extending all round, and a commodious bar which offers a ready access to the members at all hours of the day.

While many members are in the bar a light is kept burning in the tall clock tower at one corner of the building, but as soon the bar is closed the light is turned off—by whichever of the Scottish members leaves last. Thus writes Stephen Leacock in his latest book, "My Discovery of England."

The Parliament Buildings are so cast—he goes on to tell us—that it is not possible to state with certainty what they do, or do not, contain. But it is generally said that somewhere in the building is the House of Lords.

When the Lords meet they are said to come together very quietly before the dinner hour, take a glass of dry sherry and a biscuit, reject whatever bills may be before them at the moment, take another dry sherry, and then all go home for the night.

The public, according to Mr. Leacock, are no longer allowed unrestricted access to the Houses of Parliament. Its approaches are now strictly guarded by policemen. In order to obtain admission it is necessary either to give communication in writing with the Speaker of the House, enclosing certificates of naturalization and proof of identity, or (b) give a policeman five shillings. Method b is the one usually adopted.

Some Americans, instead of merely bribing the policeman with five shillings, give him as much as a pound. The English people complain bitterly of the rich Americans who have in this way corrupted the London police. Before they were corrupted they would do anything for sixpence.

The most contented people in Britain, Mr. Leacock thinks, are those hailing from beyond the Tweed. The Scots, he says, don't want Home Rule, or Sea Rai, or Dominion status, they just want the English.

When they want money they go to England and make it, if they want literary fame they sell their books to the English; and to prevent any kind of political trouble they take care to keep the Cabinet well filled with Scotsmen.

Regarding prohibition in the British Isles, the author has this to say: In Scotland prohibition is not working; if anything, it is going. Scotsmen have seventeen reasons for drinking whisky—all good.

In Ireland prohibition had only be introduced when they have run out of other forms of trouble. But in England I think that prohibition could easily succeed, for the English people realize where they are drifting and turn back. They are in the early stages of the movement already.

There are a number of good stories in Mr. Leacock's book. Amongst the best is one he tells against himself. It concerns a certain Scottish man, who officiated as chairman at one of his lectures. Of course, it fell to his lot to introduce the lecturer. This is how he did it:

"Not so long ago, ladies and gentlemen, we used to send out to Canada"—Mr. Leacock is a Canadian—"various officers of our regular army to help build up that country. We sent out our laborers, we sent our scholars and professors. Indeed, we even sent our criminals. And now with a wave of his hand towards the lecturer—"they are coming back."

No Executioner

At the present time Canada has no official executioner especially retained as such. Arthur Ellis has been recognized as conducting executions but not, it is understood, as an employe of the Department of Justice. This curious situation is brought to light by the delayed execution of Steven Ellis, who is to have been hanged at Woodstock, N.B., recently. Swim was granted a reprieve by the Chief Justice of New Brunswick because Sheriff Jones was unable to find an executioner. Sheriff Jones made an affidavit to the effect that he had first engaged Arthur Ellis, "once in the employ of the Department of Justice, but found afterwards he had been discharged by the department," and that his efforts to secure someone else had been unavailing." At the Department of Justice, it was stated that Arthur Ellis had never been officially employed, and therefore could not have been discharged. He has acted in a number of cases but not as an employe of the department. It was stated further that the execution of convicted murderers is a provincial and not a federal matter and that the department had no official executioner. It is understood that Arthur Ellis made a request some time ago that he should be appointed official executioner, but the request was refused.

An Australian View.

The Continental system of light wines and beer dispensing is the best solution of the liquor problem—better than any system of Government control, in the opinion of F. L. Flanagan, who has been inspecting the drinking systems of the world on behalf of the Government of South Australia. He sailed recently from Vancouver for Adelaide. Prohibition as practiced in the United States, he declared, is a farce. He will advise the South Australian Government against trying any similar legislation.

SET GALICIA'S VALUES.

How the Canadian Dollar Influenced —Central Europe.

The Slavic immigrant means to Canadians either a "bonuck," an unprogressive farmer or a dull laborer, or an Austro-German horde such as Col. George C. Porter has discovered in the West. He is not quite human to Canadians, and he feels it, according to a writer in the Manchester Guardian. But follow him home and you will discover how big a human factor he is in the economy of Galicia or the Ukraine.

During the period preceding the war, hundreds of thousands of Jews and peasants from East Galicia had gone overseas, the Jews mainly to New York, the Ukrainian peasants to Western Canada, writes L. B. Namier, of Oxford, in the Manchester Guardian. Hurrying home after the war, "the returning emigrant, the unskilled laborer from Canada, the holder of some poor, hard-earned $1,000, found himself a millionaire, a master in his own old village.

"He had suffered much in Canada and worked and saved patiently; he had spent the best years of his life among strangers, despised and bullied," writes Mr Namier. "It was the thought of the eventual return to his own village which had kept up his courage. And now the return was more glorious than he could ever have expected. Others had fought in the war, but he, the 'Kanadnik,' the "dollarnik"—owner of dollars—was the conqueror."

Meanwhile his brothers, ignorant and foolish, had fought for any side at all, always accepting, at face value, the promises of governments that they would be given farms. They are still waiting for the farms. And they hate the returning man, for he can buy the farms, and does so.

"With bitter irony the East Galician peasant speaks of the warrior from Canada, and the entire village presently is united first against the man who had been away whilst they suffered. Still they finish by bowing to the omnipotent dollar."

The "Kanadnik" has made the $1,000 a huge fortune, and the man whose thick body and thicker head, every Canadian sneered at, is now a big landowner "back home." An interesting sidelight is that every merchant and farmer in East Galicia knows now about Canada. The fluctuations in the value of our dollars which their compatriots brought home have either profited or robbed them; if they were Jews, they learned quickly of changes in the value of the ruble as compared with the dollar, and profited thereby; if they were Gentiles they got "taken in and cheated. By now, according to Mr. Namier, even the rural Galicians know enough to keep their Canadian dollars until they know the latest exchange quotations.

And so it has come about that the Canadian dollar is the real currency in at least one of central Europe, thanks to the Galician who did our roughest work and took the abuse of our gang bosses and politicians. Strange, indeed, are the ways by which a nation is advertised, just as strange as the changes in the status of the individual.

DELICACY MAY VANISH

SALMON BECOMING MORE RARE IN B. C. WATERS.

If Care Is Not Taken Disaster May Overtake One of Canada's Best Industries—Some of the Causes of This Situation—The Japanese Are Blamed for Destruction of Fish.

Unless conditions in British Columbia change rapidly, the prospects are that the common delicacy known as canned salmon will shortly disappear from the tables of the Easterners, as word comes from the far western province that the industry has been overdone and that the British Columbia Government is now considering calling a halt on all salmon fishing for a definite number of years. The necessity for some drastic step in this direction was forced to the attention of the officials when the regular fleets of fishing boats started out on their runs. The first boats went out and reported that though this is the "fourth year" that is, the year when the run should be unusually large, the salmon, particularly the sockeye, was hard to find. Those who are in touch with the salmon fishing industry are well aware of the fact that every fourth year there is a big run, while during the intervening years the run is but moderate. So when the normally big year begins in full down, the officials look about for the explanation.

The solution of the situation was found in the fact that four years ago the big run started in the valley of the Fraser river, which is one of the favorite runs of the salmon, and that this slide practically blocked the passage of the salmon on their way to the spawning beds on the upper reaches of the river. The slide decreased a hundred fold, according to Canadian National Railway, which, in the process of paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway from Ashcroft on the Fraser river, was forced to run much closer to the water level, and which accordingly left its track much more subject to rock slides. At any rate, the slide occurred along one stretch of the line which runs through that picturesque district known now about Canada, The Caribou Trail, and now the salmon industry is suffering. The old Caribou Trail was the road which, ran into the Cariboo gold fields some forty years ago when the gold rush was on in that section of Central British Columbia, and the Canadian Northern Railway, by taking over the lower section of the trail, not only played its part in the salmon fishing industry, but put a spike in the good road construction program of the province. Upon taking over the Caribou Trail, the officials of the Canadian Northern, who were responsible for the actual construction of the line, agreed to rebuild the trail at another point. They failed to do so, and that failure has added to the responsibility of the present management of the Nationals.

But, to get back to the salmon fishing industry, it became apparent early this season that the sockeye, which is the dainty among salmon, and therefore very profitable, were with the passing of years. Such was the situation that when the fishermen came in with their catch, they found that the price was but seven cents a fish from the canneries for the sockeye, while the "pinks," or the more common grades, were scarcely only fifteen cents, sometimes running as low as two cents a fish at the canneries. That situation, in view of the fact that the fishermen might go out at night and come back in the morning with a half dozen sockeye and several hundred "pinks," was an aggravating situation to the fishermen. So the officials have been making a careful investigation of the situation this summer, and while definite reports have not yet been taken by the British Columbia officials, the matter demands some solution, and they are still working upon it.

If the matter were one for British Columbia to solve alone it would not present many difficulties, but the fact that the fish put on early in the season; but there is the fact that the Fraser river, which is the centre of the salmon industry, is the river that runs through the United States before it finds the sea.

Another situation has developed in connection with the Pacific fisheries, and that is the growing impatience of the native-born fishermen towards the Japanese. In this, the Indians of the Queen Charlotte Islands and the other salmon fisheries at the north of the province have joined with the whites against the Japanese, and that at the present time is the running high. The charge is that the Japs do not play the game fairly. The regulations are that nets must not be used near the mouths of the smaller rivers and creeks, as it is up these bodies of water that the salmon rush on their search for spawning grounds. While the whites and the Indians respect these regulations, knowing the menace which failure to do so would create to the industry, the Japs are not credited with the same consideration for Canadian affairs. The matter was the subject of some investigation in the British Columbia this summer, but a satisfactory solution was not arrived at. The necessity has now been placed upon the fishery officials to see that the Japs conform to the regulations which have been abused so freely in the past. The Indians also charge that the Japs run into their reserves and by unfair fishing tactics are practically robbing them of their one source of income. These two situations, the partial blocking of the Fraser river four years ago and the habits of the Japanese fishermen who have large fleets at work, are responsible for the decline of the sockeye salmon fishing, the rising price, and the fact that this dainty may shortly disappear from the Canadian tables for a number of years.

GORGEOUS MORMON TEMPLE.

Luxurious Building May Be Found In Western Canada.

How two literary men on a walking tour in Western Canada stumbled unexpectedly upon a brand-new Mormon settlement in the heart of the wilderness is amusingly told by Mr. Stephen Graham in "Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies."

The name of the settlement, the first of its kind in Canada, is Cardston, and although it is yet quite recent in origin its founders have already built a Mormon temple that was actually completed at the time of the authors' visit.

Fortunately it had not been consecrated; had the two Gentiles were therefore allowed to look over it. The Mormon guide spoke in a rich Cockney accent, strewing the floor with his h's.

"This is the temple we locates," he said, "we builds temples. This is the eighth Mormon temple. The ninth is being built at Mesa, Phoenix, Arizona.

"The 'ole edifice is of stone," he proceeded, "and the foundation is of rock and concrete. There's not five dollars' worth of wood in the construction. All the wood you see is ornaments."

The temple says Mr. Graham, points to the last word in luxury and modern convenience. In the most elegant club in London, Paris, or New York I have not seen such luxury and sensual comfort as was in this splendid building in the rough Wild West.

Every room was inlaid with precious woods. The baths and robing-rooms where the candidates for initiation and sealing are prepared, were by the sultan. The lounge and fire-place carpets suggested a material heaven.

Everywhere shown a vast font reposing on the life-size figures of twelve oxen, the symbols of the twelve tribes of Israel. This font was in the centre of a vaulted chamber with galleries running round it. From the galleries the friends of the candidates could watch the ceremony of initiation. The font was large enough to baptize whole families at once.

There were several women amongst the party that was being shown round, and one of them timidly asked: "Is the water cold?"

"Cold?" said the guide ingratiatingly. "Oh no! It's warmed. It's just nice. I should say about the temperature of warm milk."

"Oh, do!" There was a chorus of approval from the women, who had evidently been considering the whole matter from a purely personal point of view.

Noticing this, the guide proceeded to dilate upon the baths, which, truth to say, were pretty elaborate.

"Ere's the men's section," he explained; "over there's the women's. You naturally 'ave the first of the women to enter the temple, and remove every speck of dust or dirt from your body. And 'ere are the robing-rooms where spotless garments is waiting for you to put on. You walks all in white wherever you goes in the temple, and when it 'as been consecrated no more folks will ever go in it in ordinary clothes like as you and me to-day."

It was very interesting and impressive, but unfortunately Mr. Graham put some questions to the guide concerning polygamy, causing that individual to close the mouth more tightly than the proverbial oyster.

When the two friends bade him good-bye he would only give them his left hand.

"A left-handed shake!" said the author's companion meditatively, as they went down the steps. "You know what that means amongst Canadians?"

"No."

"It means 'So long!'"

ACADIANS RECALLED.

Memorial Dedicated In the Annapolis Valley.

Time is softening the asperities of the controversy over the expulsion of the Acadians, and there has been general satisfaction over the dedication recently at Grand Pre, in the Annapolis valley, of a building reproduce as far as possible, the original chapel there before the tragic event of 1755. The structure is about 60 by 100 feet and will cost $12 by 15 feet. Most of it will be used as a museum, with a portion also set aside for the display of products of the Acadian district, such as grain. This does the practical blend with the poetical in the modern Acadia.

For many years the Dominion Atlantic Railway and other tourist-serving agencies have capitalized the romantic atmosphere of the Grand Pre and Gaspereau regions. Even

PAINS IN BACK AND SIDES

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ontario.—"I used to have very bad pains in my back and sides often was not fit to do my work. I tried many medicines before I began to take yours. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the Toronto Globe and now that it has helped me I recommend it to all of my neighbors to keep it in the house all the time and take it once in a while no matter how well I feel, for one ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."—ELIZABETH CAMPBELL, 13 St. Paul St., Lindsay, Ontario.

To do any kind of work—and you know there is much to be done—is next to impossible if you are suffering from some form of female trouble. It may cause your back to ache or a pain in your side; it may make you nervous and irritable. You may be able to keep up and around, but you do not feel good.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for women. It is especially adapted to relieve the cause of these troubles, and restore them to normal health.

the otoconomites have borne the names of leading characters in "Evangeline." The well attributed to that immortal but sad young lady, and the willows hard by, have been visited and photographed until they must be as well known as Nelson's monument in London or St. Mark's at Venice. But all the while the controversy over the rights and wrongs of the expulsion of the unhappy Acadians were being threshed over by the partisans. Longfellow created tremendous sympathy for them by his poems, and Parkman took much the other side. The late Judge Savary of Annapolis, almost to his dying day, a short time ago, kept alive the flames of controversy, and a hundred others, great and small, debated the issue.

But history drops into shadow compared with the popularity of "Evangeline" itself. It has attained a circulation of 3,229,339 copies in the United States alone, and has gone into ten foreign languages. Its origin is one of the romances of literature. The germ of the story was given to Longfellow by Nathaniel Hawthorne one night in 1844 when the latter was dining at the poet's house in Cambridge along with Dev. H. Hedge, a clergyman of a church in South Boston. The story had been told by Connolly to Hawthorne some time previously, and when Hawthorne left to Longfellow the latter said to Hawthorne:

"If you really do not want this incident for a tale, let me have it for a poem."

The original version of the theme, as recorded by Hawthorne in his commonplace book, was as follows:

H. C. L.—Heard from a French-Canadian a story of 5 young couples in Acadie, who, shortly after the arrival of the men of the province were summoned to assemble in the church to hear a proclamation. When assembled they were seized and shipped off to be distributed through New England — among them the newly-wedmen. The bride left at the altar—the bridegroom absent in England all her lifetime, and at last, when she was old, she found her bridegroom on the deathbed—and the shock was so great that it killed her likewise.

Corn Cobs.

Science has found a way of utilizing all sorts of waste, even in the manufacture of various commodities. As the corn cob contains many cellulose, which is valuable for the making of all sorts of paper, it is considered desirable to save the material of the cob. The finest, therefore, is taken from the cobs after the corn is shelled by boiling the cob in water, and the cellulose can thus be kept for other purposes. This liquid is employed for many purposes in the dead-wood industry, and can be so treated that it will yield a bright green dye, which is much liked by women of fashion.

Deseronto Loses An Aged Resident

Mr. George Lucas, Sr., an elderly, pleasant an respected citizen, died at his home on Thomas street in Deseronto, rather suddenly on Saturday morning, at 1 o'clock, at the age of eighty-five years and nine months. Mr. Lucas had been ailing for a few weeks past, but the end was not expected. He moved to Deseronto with his wife from Yarker about two and a half years ago. He was born in North Fredericksburgh, and lived in that community for forty years, when he moved with his family to Portland township, near Yarker, where he lived until about nine years ago. Failing in health he sold the farm and moved into Yarker.

The Late J. R. Dafoe.

J. Raymond Dafoe, one of Napanee's highly respected business men, passed away quite suddenly on Monday morning. Mr. Dafoe had not been in good health for some time, but was only confined to the home a few days before the end came. For a number of years Mr. Dafoe carried on a flour and coal business, and was proprietor of the flour mill at Napanee until a short time before it was torn down. He was also superintendent of the waterworks plant, a position which he held from the time the plant was started until the present time. Latterly, with his son, Mr. Arthur Dafoe, he has been in the automobile business. Besides his widow he leaves three children; Mrs. Coleen Stewart, of Toronto; Mr. Arthur Dafoe, Napanee; and Mr. Ross Dafoe, Toronto.

N. C. I. Sports.

On Saturday the Trenton H. S. basketball teams visited Napanee to play the Collegiate teams. The games were played in the armouries and resulted in a score of 19-10 in favor of Napanee, for the senior game. The game was fast and interesting from start to finish. The Juniors in a strenuous game were defeated by the visitors, the score being 32-2.

The Senior line-upswas as follows:

Trenton—Forwards, Eileen McCauley, Sarah Hendricks; centres, Annie Milligan, Bessie Bruyea; guards, Doris Bowers, Olive Anderson. Captain, Annie Milligan.

Napanee.—Forwards, Naomi Roblin, Mildred Perry; guards, Edna VanKoughnett, Alma Wales; centres, Winnifred and Betty Perry. Captain, Winnifred Perry.

Trenton Junior line-up—Forwards, Kathleen McCauley, Nora Haines; centres, Irene Nichols, Lena Desjardine; guards, Helen Hawkins, Helen Sutcliffe.

Napanee—Forwards, Y. McGraw, K. O'Ray; centres, K. Gallagher, H. Davy; guards, L. Birchall, G. Roblin; subs, M. Derry, R. Dalton.

The Albert College football team also visited Napanee Saturday to play against the Collegiate boys. After a fast, exciting game the score ended 2-1 in favor of the Napanee Collegiate. Following the games refreshments were served to the visitors in the Collegiate, and in the evening the students made merry on the streets with a parade.

Canada's Pride.

Canada has many institutions of which she is justly proud but there is one of which at least a million of Canadians are particularly fond. It is the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal which has kept Canada to the fore in the newspaper world. That great family and farm paper goes on year after year improving in every department until it has reached a point of proficiency that places it far in the van. The publishers promise even greater value for 1923. It is already the greatest value on this continent and no home can well afford to be without it.

Tanlac Demand Is Greater Than Ever in History

Modern Plants have Increased Capacity of 62,240 Bottles A Day But Makers are Still Behind Orders. Medicine Publicly Endorsed by Best People Everywhere.

During the first seven months of this year 3,584,000 bottles of Tanlac have been sold and a new world record for a proprietary medicine is established.

Tanlac's wide-spread and ever increasing popularity is the strongest possible proof if its unquestioned merit. No product, no matter how extensively advertised, could continue to establish world records for sales year after year if it did not produce actual and positive results.

Tanlac is composed of the most beneficial roots, herbs and barks known to medical science. The formula is ethical and conforms to all pure food and drug laws, and although Tanlac's superiority is abundantly supported by leading authorities it is the people themselves who have made Tanlac what it is. Millions upon millions have used it and have told other millions what it has done, while thousands of the best people in every community have given public statements of the great benefits they have received by taking it.

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

WANT GOLD STANDARD.

Canada Will Return to Pre-War Financial Basis.

OTTAWA, Oct. 23.—The coming session of Parliament, it is thought, is likely to see the repeal or modification of some remaining financial war legislation and the formal return of Canadian currency to a gold basis.

At the present time, under war legislation still in force, the Government is not required to redeem Dominion notes in gold. In addition, there is an embargo on the export of gold—an embargo first imposed by Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act, and then, after the war, continued by statute. These steps were taken to conserve in the country the available supply of gold, and have been continued during the reconstruction period to ensure against depletion of the gold reserve.

Recent spectacular improvements in Canadian exchange, however, are raising the question whether it would not be advisable to return to pre-war conditions in regard to redemption in gold. When Canadian funds were at a heavy discount in the United States, there existed the probability, had the war legislation not been continued, that the gold reserve would be heavily depleted by presentation of Canadian notes. But instead of being at discount, the Canadian dollar is now at a slight premium, as compared with the American dollar, and it is argued there is not the same necessity for continuance of the legislation.

The question is one which Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, will no doubt consider carefully on his return, and any action recommended to Parliament would be dependent on financial conditions existing at the time.

LOST IN STORM.

Member of Famous Athletic Family Drowned In Georgian Bay.

PENETANGUISHENE, Ont., Oct. 23.—Word that the boat in which Albert Carbeau, brother of Bert Corbeau, the well-known hockey player, set sail from Penetanguishene, was wrecked in the Georgian Bay, was brought here by Walter Rumble, of Kitchener. Mr. Rumble, who owns a high-powered motor boat, was cruising about the bay in the vicinity of the Giant's Tomb and he reported that he found the Corbeau boat, as well as the cabin cruiser Ariadne, near the "Watches," which is the local name for the great rocks which loop watch over the entrance to the Giant's Tomb.

Albert Corbeau left Penetanguishene on Friday last and no word has been heard of him since. On Saturday a bad wind-storm swept both Penetanguishene and the Georgian Bay and it was feared then that the craft would be unable to weather the storm. When he did not return by Saturday afternoon all hope of his surviving the storm was abandoned.

Albert Corbeau came from a famous family of athletes. Besides his brother, Bert, he also had another brother, Con," who was prominent in athletic circles. He predeceased him about a year ago. Friends of Penetanguishene are now organizing search parties to attempt to recover the remains.

Guilty of Murder.

HALIFAX, N.S., Oct. 23. — Ralph Myles, soldier, was found guilty of murdering Florence Miles, of this city, on June 2. The two had been keeping company for several months previously. Myles was found on June 2 unconscious lying across the dead body of the girl. Myles in his defence testified that the girl had shot him and then committed suicide. In a statement made after he and the girl were found he claimed that the shooting followed a "suicide pact."

WILL CRERAR RESIGN?

Progressive Party Is Facing a Crisis in Career.

Convention Will Be Held In Winnipeg on November 10 to Decide on Future Policy — Fusion Talk Has Caused Uneasiness and Farmers Will Deal at Once With Aims of Their Movement.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 23.—The future leadership of the Progressive party in the Federal Parliament most likely will be considered at the meeting here on November 10 of Progressive members. It was authoritatively stated that the present leader, Hon. T. A. Crerar, finds it impossible to continue to occupy the positions of president of the United Grain Growers, Ltd., and leader of the party.

This is amplified by the statement of Thomas Deare, retiring vice-president of the Saskatchewan Progressive party, who stated at the Regina meeting of the provincial executive on Saturday that Mr. Crerar would make up his mind either to resign his position as president of the United Grain Growers or party leader before the annual meeting of the directors of the U.G. G. at Calgary on November 23.

It will be left to the Progressive members to decide which position he should retain, according to authoritative information, which practically means that if the members are desirous of retaining Mr. Crerar in the leadership of the party some financial arrangements will have to be made whereby he can devote all his time and attention to the political field..

Senator Turriff, sole representative of the Progressives in the Senate, has also been invited to attend the Winnipeg conference.

Arrangements are being made that Eastern Progressive members may be shown the methods in vogue for handling the western grain during their visit here. Many of the eastern members, it is said, support the movement for a Wheat Board at the last session of Parliament without having very much knowledge of the marketing system in force at present. It is thought that as a result of the western trip they will have a clearer understanding of the question, if the subject comes up for discussion when Parliament meets again.

Opinion is Divided.

OTTAWA, Oct. 23.—To all appearances the reported effort of Premier King to strengthen the position of his Government in the House of Commons by an alliance with the Progressive group has occasioned much uneasiness in the ranks of the Progressive party. It has been interesting to note the sequence of references to the subject in the newspapers. Not long ago it was reported that Premier King's negotiations looking to a fusion or an alliance of the Liberal and Progressive parties were progressing favorably and that differences between the parties on questions of policy, even on the tariff issue, would probably be composed. Then came the announcement that Progressives representing prairie constituencies in the Commons were to be convened in Winnipeg to consider what should be their attitude toward the King Government during the next session of Parliament.

Open declarations and hints of opposition to a fusion of parties or coalition, both in the west and the east, may have indicated obstacles in the way of progress of the negotiations.

It may be that a number of Progressive members of Parliament are inclined to favor an alliance with the party in power and it may be that the protagonists of such an arrangement have not yet been heard from. There is, however, evidence that a considerable faction in the party is prepared to permit the farmers' political movement to be made an adjunct of the Liberal party in Federal affairs. R. A. Hoey, a Progressive representative on spring-field, Man., in the Commons, seems to regard Premier King's invitation to the Progressive leaders as a sort of Grecian gift, or an apple of discord tossed by the Prime Minister with the object of disrupting the Agrarian party.

A Progressive meeting in the constituency of Last Mountain, Sask., listened to addresses in which J. F. Johnston, member for the district and chief whip of the party in the Commons, and T. H. McConica, M.P. of Battleford, threw out some arguments in support of a Liberal-Progressive alliance. Then the audience voted unanimously against fusion with the Liberals. Finally, the Stony Plains local of the United Farmers of Alberta, in any party resolution, voiced the opinion which is said to be widely held in the province. The resolution charged Hon. E. C. Drury with engaging in negotiations looking to an alliance which would destroy the identity of the Progressive party, and demanded his resignation of the party leadership. In Alberta the Agrarian movement is dominated by Henry Wise Wood, who believes that its expression in the legislature of the Dominion is class or group aspirations and desires to maintain the Progressive party to voice the opinions of the farmers.

Prohibition on the Lakes.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—Although the issue of prohibitionists under the Daugherty ruling, prohibiting liquor on all vessels outside the three-mile limit, is held up pending the decision of Federal Judge Hand, it is learned that prohibition officials take the view the ruling applies to the Great Lakes.

How strictly they will enforce, if the courts uphold the ruling, they do not say. Technically, however, they believe it applies to Canadian ships carrying 2½ per cent. beer.

BONAR LAW IS ACTIVE

Will Probably Announce His Cabinet This Week

If Conservative Ministry Can Be Completed by Wednesday, Dissolution of Parliament Will Then Take Place — Reginald McKenna May Line Up With New Prime Minister.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—Andrew Bonar Law will complete his new Ministry by Wednesday. He will then go to the King at once and recommend dissolution of Parliament, which would ensure ratification of the Irish treaty by December 6th, the statutory limit.

Although it was Sunday, Premier Lloyd George's secretary was busy all day removing books and documents from No. 10 Downing street. Mr. Lloyd George gave a farewell dinner there Sunday night—a temporary farewell, his adherents believe—for a number of his Cabinet colleagues, including Austen Chamberlain, Lord Chancellor Birkenhead and Sir Robert Horne. It is said he will take a house at Westminster for the time being.

In a truly Georgian manner, he is holding his free fling at present. His Leeds speech Saturday was principally a defence of the Coalition without indicating his future course. Probably he will not clearly state his case until he begins his long speaking excursion through the country.

His Unionist critics see in the Leeds speech a return to what they call his "little house methods," referring to the occasion on which he spoke of a duke as one of the litter. But they do not underrate his fighting qualities when his back is to the wall.

The return of Reginald McKenna, former Liberal Chancellor of the Exchequer, to politics is as unexpected as any of the political surprises of the last week. For the three years he has been chairman of the City and Midland Bank, Mr. McKenna has held aloof from politics. On a number of occasions, he has been invited to attend Independent Liberal meetings, but has refused.

Only a few months ago he was offered an easy way to the House of Commons. Some of the most influential Conservatives in banking circles asked him to accept the nomination to fill the vacancy caused by Arthur Balfour's elevation to the peerage. They suggested he run as an Independent, but he declined. His friends now hint that while he has held aloof from party matters, he is ready to places his services as a financial expert at Mr. Bonar Law's disposal.

Winston Spencer Churchill, Secretary for the Colonies in the Lloyd George Cabinet, who has taken no part in the political crisis owing to illness, has telegraphed the president of the Liberal Association of Dundee, his constituency, promising to issue a political manifesto shortly. In the telegram Mr. Churchill stated briefly that his political viewpoint had not been changed by recent events.

"I am chairman of the National Liberal Council," the message said, "and I propose to stand as a Liberal and a free trader. But I shall ask the electors to authorize me to co-operate freely with the sober-minded and Progressive Conservatives in defending the lasting and central interests of this nation and its wide Empire against the dangerous attacks now about to be levelled upon them by the socialist and Communist forces, as well as by the almost equally serious menace of downright reaction from the opposite quarter.

"I shall appeal to the Liberals and the Conservatives of Dundee to stand shoulder to shoulder against the Labor and Communist candidates."

"Father of Fleet" Dies.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—Admiral Sir Algernon de Horsey, known as "the Father of the Fleet," died at Cowes Sunday.

Admiral de Horsey had been Deputy Governor of the Isle of Wight since 1913. He was 95 years old. He was senior naval officer during the Jamaica insurrection of 1865 and the Fenian raids on the lakes of Canada in 1866. He was commodore of the British fleet in the West Indies from 1872 to 1875, and commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet from 1876 to 1879. During his command in the Pacific his flagship, the Shah, engaged the Peruvian authorities. The question of the admiral's action was debated in Parliament, but de Horsey was justified for what he did. The admiral was placed on the retired list in 1892.

Killed His Companion.

PORT ARTHUR, Oct. 23.—Orion Livingstone, aged 17, was mortally wounded by McIntyre township on Saturday morning, and died at two o'clock in the afternoon at the hospital. With two companions, Keith Pasco and William Young, he was practicing shooting at various objects along the road. Young had a can, he threw it in the air. His companions shot at the can. Livingstone dropped. When the other boys examined him it was found he had suffered a serious wound in the head. Immediate aid was summoned, but the lad died soon afterward.

Explosion Causes Collapse.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., Oct. 23.—Believed to have been caused by a dust explosion, a small elevator owned by the Ogilvie Grain Company, collapsed Saturday. An adjoining building was partially wrecked by several thousand bushels of wheat breaking through the roof.

The elevator, which was built in 1912, had a total capacity of about 6,000 bushels.

In the absence of the loss is available, but if good weather prevails it will be small, as most of the grain can be salved. There were no casualties.

H. G. Wells Comes Last.

GLASGOW, Oct. 23.—The present political turmoil in Great Britain was reflected in the proceedings at the rectorial election at Glasgow University Saturday, when Lord Birkenhead, Unionist, was elected, with 1,165 votes, over Sir John Simon, Liberal, who received 530 votes. In the course of the polling several free fights occurred among the students, in which books, rotten eggs and decayed fish were freely used.

Engine Killed Child.

HAMILTON, Oct. 23.—Stepping on the tracks before the engineer was able to stop his engine, John Steparo, two years of age, who resided with his parents at 159 Bellwood avenue, was killed Sunday morning on a spur line of the Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo Railway, near Primrose and Bellwood avenues.

The child is thought to have wandered from home to the tracks. Note of the train was lost in the boy until he stepped forth from weeds and was beween the rails. Michael Gavin, the engineer, tried to stop the locomotive, but was unable to do so in time to prevent the child from being run over.

Arabs May Attack Jews.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—According to Lord Riddell's News of the World, the situation in Palestine has become so acute the Arabs may at any time attack the Jews. The Moslem-Christian Association is openly flouting the Government's authority, the paper declares.

The News of the World also holds America largely to blame for all the Near Eastern muddle, owing to the neglect of America to back up the treaties which she took so great a part in preparing.

It is asserted the situation in Palestine is so dangerous it may lead to a crisis like the recent one with Turkey.

Election Will Have to Be Held For Federal House.

OTTAWA, Oct. 23.—With the death at Bedford, N.S., Sunday of Dr. Edward Blackadder, junior Liberal member for Halifax in the House of Commons, four, if not five vacancies will have to be filled, and it is probable that one of the seats vacated will have new members before Parliament opens in January.

The other vacancies are: Jacques Cartier, by the death last week of D. A. Lafortune, K.C., Liberal, of Montreal; Lanark, by the death of Hon. John Edward Stewart, Minister of Railways and Canals in the Meighen Administration; Megantic, Quebec, by the resignation, of Lucien Pacaud, who, it is understood, is to accept a secretaryship in the Canadian High Commissioner's Office in London, and Moose Jaw, Sask., by the court action against R. M. Johnson, a prominent Progressive. In the last case, although Mr. Johnson will appeal the judgment of the Saskatchewan court, it is believed that the judgment will be sustained and that a by-election will be necessitated.

In two of the seats the members were formerly in one Conservative, and in one Progressive.

CHAPTER V.

A Night and a Morning.

Stella Donovan never forgot the miseries of her first night in Haskell. When old Man Timmons finally left her, after placing the flaring lamp on a chair, and was pattering back down the bare hall, she glanced shudderingly about at her unpleasant surroundings, none too pleased with the turn of events.

The bed-clothing, once turned back and inspected, was of a nature to prevent the girl from disrobing; but finally she lay down, seeking such rest as was possible, after turning the flickering flames of the lamp as low as she dared, and then finally blowing it out altogether. Her thoughts, never still, wandered over the events of the evening—the arrival at Haskell station, the strange meeting with Westcott, and the sudden revelation that he was the partner of Frederick Cavendish.

The big, good-natured miner had interested her from the first as representing a perfect type of her preconceived ideal of the real westerner. She had liked the firm character of his face, the quiet, thoughtful way in which he acted, the whole unobtrusive bearing of the man. Already he had awakened her trust; she felt convinced that if she needed friendship, advice, even actual assistance, here was one whom she could implicitly trust.

She was young and she awoke rested and refreshed, in spite of the fact that her body ached at first from the discomfort of the cot. She stared about at the bare, board walls, the bullet-scarred mirror, the cracked pitcher, before she could fully reassure herself; then stepped upon the disreputable rug and crossed to the open window.

She straightened up, emitting a swift breath of delight, as her wide-open eyes surveyed the marvelous scene of mingled loveliness and grandeur. The stream, curving like a great snake, gleamed amid the arena of green plain, its swift waters sparkling in the sun. Beyond, seemingly at no distance at all, yet bordered by miles of turf and desert, the patches of vivid green interspersed with the dusky coloring of spruce, and the outcropping of brown rocks, the towering peaks of a great mountain-chain swept up into the clear blue of the sky, black almost to their summits, which were dazzling with the white of unmelted snow.

The girl's eyes dwelt lovingly for some time on the far-flung line of mountains, before she finally released the green shade, and shut out the scene. Her toilet was a matter of but a few minutes, although she took occasion to slip on a fresh waist, and to brighten up the shoes, somewhat soiled by the tramp through the thick dust the evening before. Indeed, it was a very charming young woman, her dress and appearance quite sufficiently eastern, who finally ventured out into the rough hall, and down the single flight of stairs. The hotel was silent, except for the heavy shouting of a sleeper in one of the rooms she passed, and a melancholy-looking Chinaman, apparently engaged in chamber work at the further end of the hall.

She passed out into the bright sunshine, and clear mountain air. The board walk ended at the corner of the hotel, but a narrow cinder path continued down that side of the street for some distance. Through the rude window at the post office the clerk pushed a plain manila envelope into her outstretched hand. Evidently from the thinness of the letter, Farriss had but few instructions to give and, thrusting the unopened envelope into her handbag, she retraced her steps to her room.

There she ventured a startled gasp. The suitcase which she had left closed upon the floor was open—wide open—its contents disarranged, as one had rummaged it thoroughly. And Miss Donovan knew that she was under suspicion.

The knowledge gave the girl a sudden thrill, but not of fear. Instead it served to strengthen her resolve. There had been nothing in her valise to show who she really was or why she was in Haskell, and consequently, if any vague suspicion had been aroused as to her presence in that community, the searchers had discovered no proof by this rifling of her bag.

Farriss' letter contained nothing of interest except the fact that Enright had also left for the West. He instructed her to be on the lookout for him in Haskell, added a line or two of suggestions, and ordered her to proceed with caution, as her quest might prove to be a dangerous one.

Miss Donovan thought rapidly and clearly, more than ordinarily eager to solve this mystery. It was Frederick Cavendish who had formerly been the partner of Jim Westcott. This was why no answer had come to the telegram made the journey, although it hardly compares with Tennessee Pass or Silver Plume. Still, you know, it will be pleasant to tell Mr. Cavendish when I go back that I was here."

He choked and his face seemed to whiten suddenly.

"Mr. Cavendish?" he gasped. "Of New York? Not the one that was killed?"

It was her turn to stare across the table, her eyes wide with horror, which she simulated excellently.

"Killed! Has a man by that name been killed lately in New York? It was Frederick Cavendish I referred to." Her pretense was admirable.

He was silent, realizing he had already said too much.

"Tell me," she insisted, "has he been killed? How do you know?"

Her earnestness, her perfect acting, convinced him. It was a mere coincidence, he thought, that this name should have cropped up between them, but, now that it had, he must explain the whole, affair so as not to arouse suspicion. He cleared his throat and compelled his eyes to meet those across the table.

"Well, I don't know much about it, only what I read," he began, feeling for words. "He was found dead in his apartments, apparently killed by a burglar who had rifled his safe."

She sat with her chin in the palm of one hand, watching him from beneath the shadow of lowered lashes, but his eyes were bent downward at his plate.

"Are you through?" he questioned suddenly.

"Yes; this—this awful news has robbed me of all appetite."

Neither had noticed Westcott as he entered the room, but his first glance about revealed their presence, and without an instant of hesitancy the big miner crossed the room and approached the table where the two were sitting.

"I hope I do not interrupt," he said pleasantly. "I had reason to suppose you were unacquainted with Mr. Beaton here."

"What reason?" her surprised tone slightly indignant.

"I believe the gentleman so informed me. It chanced that we had a slight controversy last night."

"Over me?"

"Over his curiosity regarding you—who you were; your presence here. I informed him that it was none of his business, and that if he mentioned your name in my presence again there was liable to be trouble. We scrapped it out."

"You—you scrapped it out? You mean there was a fight over me—a barroom squabble over me?"

"Not in a barroom; in the hotel office. Beaton drew a gun, and I had to slug him."

"But the affair originated over me—my name was brought into it?" she insisted. "You actually threatened him because he asked about me?"

"I reckon that was about how it started," he admitted slowly. "You see, I rather thought I was a sorter friend of yours, and that I ought to stand up for you."

Her eyes were scornful, angry.

"Indeed! Well, permit me to say, Mr. Westcott, that I choose my own friends, and am perfectly competent to defend my own character. This closes our acquaintanceship."

She moved about the end of the table and touched Beaton's sleeve with her fingers.

"Would you escort me to the foot of the stairs?" she asked, her voice softening. "We will leave this belligerent individual to his own company."

Neither of them glanced back, the girl still speaking as they disappeared, but Westcott turned in his chair to watch them cross the room. He had no sense of anger, no desire to retaliate, but he felt dazed and as though the whole world was suddenly turned upside down. So she really belonged with that outfit, did she? Well, it was a good joke on him.

Before he finished his meal his mood had changed to tolerant amusement. That the girl had deliberately deceived him was plain enough, revealed now in both her manner and words. It was clear she really belonged to the Lacy crowd, and had no more use for him.

He could scarcely comprehend the situation; how a girl of her apparent refinement and gentility could ever be attracted by a rough, brutal type such as Ned Beaton so evidently was. There surely must be some other cause drawing them together. Yet, whatever it was, there was no doubt but that he had been very properly snubbed. Her words stung; yet it was the manner in which she looked at him and swept past at Beaton's side which hurt the most. Oh, well, an enemy more or less made small difference in his life; he would laugh at it and forget. She had made her choice of companionship, and it was just as well, probably, that the affair had gone no further before he discovered the sort of girl she really was.

Westcott reached this decision and the outer office at the same time, exchanged a careless word or two with Timmons, and finally purchased a cigar and retired to one corner to peruse an old newspaper. It was not so easy to read, however, for the news failed to interest or keep his mind from wandering widely.

Who was this Beaton, and what connection could he have with Bill Lacy's gang? The row last night had revealed a mutual interest between the two men, but what was its nature? Lacy's purpose he believed he understood to some extent—a claim that it was an extension of the La Rosita vein which Westcott had tapped in his recent discovery. But he had no personal fear of Lacy; not at least, if he could once get the backing of Cavendish's money. But these other people—Beaton, Miss Donovan, and still another expected to arrive soon from the East—how were they connected with the deal?

He was so deeply engrossed in these thoughts that he remained unaware that Timmons had left the office, or that the Chinese manual-of-work had silently tiptoed down the stairs and was cautiously peering in through the open doorway to make sure the coast was clear. Assured as to this, the wily grams and letters the latter had sent East. What had become of them? Had they fallen into the hands of these others? Was this the true reason for Beaton's presence in Haskell, and also why the La Rue woman had been hastily sent for?

Westcott's discovery was not even proven yet; its value had not been definitely established; it was of comparatively small importance contrasted with the known wealth left by the murdered man in the East. No, there must be some other cause for this sudden visit to Colorado. But what? She gave little credence to the vague suspicions advanced by Valois; that was altogether too impossible, too melodramatic, this thought of the substitution of some other body. No doubt there had been a crime committed, its object the attainment of money, but without question the cost had been the life of Frederick Cavendish.

The harsh clang of the dinner-bell from the porch below aroused her to a sense of hunger.

Ten minutes later Timmons, guiltless of any coat, but temporarily laying aside his pipe as a special act of courtesy, escorted her into the dining room and seated her at a table between the two front windows. Evidently this was reserved for the more distinguished guests—travelling men and those paying regular day rates—for its only other occupant was an individual in a check suit.

A waitress, a red-haired, slovenly girl, with an impudent, lisping speech, took her order and disappeared in the direction of the kitchen, and Miss Donovan discreetly lifted her eyes to observe the man sitting nearly opposite. He was not prepossessing, yet she instantly recognized his type, and the probability that he would address her if the slightest opportunity occurred.

The waitress spread out the various dishes before her, and she cleaned them hopelessly. As she lifted her gaze she met that of her vis-a-vis fairly, and managed to smile.

"Some chuck," he said in an attempt at good-fellowship, "but not to remind you of the Waldorf-Astoria."

"I should say not," she answered, testing one of her dishes cautiously. "But why associate me with New York?"

"You can't hide those things in a joint like this. When did you leave New York?"

"Oh, more than a week ago," she lied gracefully.

He stroked his moustache.

"Then I suppose you haven't much late New York news? Nothing startling, I mean?"

"No; only what has been reported in the western papers. I do not recall anything particularly interesting." She dropped her eyes to her plate and busied herself with a piece of tough beef. "The usual murders, of course, and things of that kind."

There was a moment's silence, then the man laughed as though slightly ill at ease. "Whatever brought a girl like you down in here?"

She smiled.

"I'm a feature writer; I'm doing a series on the West for Scribbler's," she told him. "I visit New Mexico next, but I'm after something else besides a description of mountains and men; I'm also going to hunt up an old friend interested in mining, who told me if ever I got out this way I must look him up. He was continually singing this valley's charms, and so here I am. And I'm planning a great surprise on him. And, of course, I'm literally drinking in atmosphere—to say nothing of local color, which seems mostly to be men and revolvers."

The man opposite wet his lips with his tongue in an effort to speak, but the girl was busy eating and apparently paid no attention. Her calm indifference convinced him that her words were entirely innocent, and his audacity returned.

"Well," he ventured, "do you agree with this prospector friend?"

"The scenery, you mean?" glancing up brightly. "Why, it is wonderful, of course, and I am not at all sorry having made the journey, although it hardly compares with Tennessee Pass or Silver Plume. Still, you know, it will be pleasant to tell Mr. Cavendish when I go back that I was here."

He choked and his face seemed to whiten suddenly.

oriental slided noiselessly across the floor and paused beside him.

"Zis Meester Vest-c ott?" he asked softly.

"That's my name, John; what is it?"

The messenger shook a folded paper out of his sleeve, thrust it into the other's hand hastily, and, with a hurried glance about, started to slide away as silently as he had come. It vanished into the dark hall, and there was the faint clatter of his shoes on the stairs.

Westcott, fully aroused, cast his glance about the deserted room, and unfolded the paper which had been left in his fingers. His eyes took in the few penciled words instantly.

"Do not be angry. I had the best of reasons. Meet me near the cedar bridge at three o'clock. Very important. S. D."

He read the lines over again, his lips emitting a low whistle, his eyes darkening with sudden appreciation. It had been a trick, then, a bit of play acting! Had her part been real? Was not this rather the real fraud—this sudden change of heart. This note might have a sinister purpose; be intended to deceive. No! He would not believe this. All his old working faith in her came back in a flash of revelation. He would continue to believe in her, trust her, feel that some worthy purpose had influenced her strange action. And, above all, he would be at the lower bridge on the hour set. He was back at the desk when Timmons returned.

"What do I owe you, old man?"

He paid the bill jokingly and in the best of humor, careful to tell the proprietor that he was leaving for his mine and might not return for several days. He possessed confidence that Timmons would make no secret of this in Haskell after his departure. He was glad to notice that Beaton observed him as he passed the Good Luck saloon and went tramping down the dusty road.

The only carriage belonging to the town livery passed soon after his arrival, evidently bound for the station, and from his covert he recognized

Who was this Beaton, and what connection could he have with Bill Lacy's gang? The row last night had revealed a mutual interest between the two men, but what was its nature? Lacy's purpose he believed he understood to some extent—a claim that it was an extension of the La Rosita vein which Westcott had tapped in his recent discovery. But he had no personal fear of Lacy; not at least, if he could once get the backing of Cavendish's money. But these other people—Beaton, Miss Donovan, and still another expected to arrive soon from the East—how were they connected with the deal?

He was so deeply engrossed in these thoughts that he remained unaware that Timmons had left the office, or that the Chinese manual-of-work had silently tiptoed down the stairs and was cautiously peering in through the open doorway to make sure the coast was clear. Assured as to this, the wily oriental slided noiselessly across the floor and paused beside him.

"Zis Meester Vest-c ott?" he asked softly.

"That's my name, John; what is it?"

The messenger shook a folded paper out of his sleeve, thrust it into the other's hand hastily, and, with a hurried glance about, started to slide away as silently as he had come. It vanished into the dark hall, and there was the faint clatter of his shoes on the stairs.

Westcott, fully aroused, cast his glance about the deserted room, and unfolded the paper which had been left in his fingers. His eyes took in the few penciled words instantly.

"Do not be angry. I had the best of reasons. Meet me near the cedar bridge at three o'clock. Very important. S. D."

He read the lines over again, his lips emitting a low whistle, his eyes darkening with sudden appreciation. It had been a trick, then, a bit of play acting! Had her part been real? Was not this rather the real fraud—this sudden change of heart. This note might have a sinister purpose; be intended to deceive. No! He would not believe this. All his old working faith in her came back in a flash of revelation. He would continue to believe in her, trust her, feel that some worthy purpose had influenced her strange action. And, above all, he would be at the lower bridge on the hour set. He was back at the desk when Timmons returned.

"What do I owe you, old man?"

He paid the bill jokingly and in the best of humor, careful to tell the proprietor that he was leaving for his mine and might not return for several days. He possessed confidence that Timmons would make no secret of this in Haskell after his departure. He was glad to notice that Beaton observed him as he passed the Good Luck saloon and went tramping down the dusty road.

The only carriage belonging to the town livery passed soon after his arrival, evidently bound for the station, and from his covert he recognized tuted because of his facial resemblance. My belief is that Fred returned to his apartments, took what money he required, packed his valise, and departed without a word to any one. He often did things like that—hastily, on the spur of the moment."

"But what happened afterward?"

"The rest is all theory. I do not know, but I'll make a guess. In some way the conspirators learned what had occurred, but not in time to intercept his departure; yet they had everything ready for action, and realized this was the opportunity. Frederick had disappeared leaving no trace behind; they could attend to him later, intercept him, perhaps— Wait! Keep still. There comes the carriage from the train."

He drew her back into the denser undergrowth and they looked out through the leaves to where the road circled in toward the bridge. The hoofbeats of horses alone broke the silence.

CHAPTER VI.

Viewed From Both Sides.

The carriage emerged into full view, hastily, on the spur of the moment." Beside the driver it contained three passengers—Beaton on the front seat, his face turned backward toward the two behind, a man and a woman.

The girl seized Westcott's arm while she directed his gaze with her free hand. "Look!" she cried. "The woman is La Rue. And the man—the man is Enright! He is the lawyer I told you of, the one whose hand is not clear in this affair. And he is here!"

"Good!" Westcott exclaimed. "I'm glad they're both here. It means that there will be more to observe, and it means that there will be action—and that, too, quick! They are out here for a definite purpose which must soon be disclosed. And, Miss Donovan, I may be a little rock-worn and a little bit out of style, but I think their presence here has something to do with the whereabouts of Fred Cavendish."

The girl looked straight into his honest, clear eyes. His remark opened a vast field for speculation. "You think he is alive, then?" she said earnestly. "It is an interesting hypothesis. Perhaps—perhaps he may be in this neighborhood, even. And that," she added, her Irish eyes alight, "would be more interesting still."

"I will admit my argument when that carriage appeared," Westcott answered. "Do you remember? Well, that might be the answer. Beaton has been in this neighborhood ever since about the time of that murder in New York. Nobody knows what his business is, but he is handling glove with Bill Lacy and his gang. Lacy, besides running a saloon, pretends to be a mining speculator, but it is my opinion there is nothing he wouldn't do for money, if he considered the game safe. And now, with everything quiet in the East, and no thought that there is any suspicion remaining, Beaton sends for the woman to join him here. Why? Because there is some job to be done too-big for him to tackle alone. He's merely a gunman; he can do the strong-arm stuff, all right, but lacks brains. There is a crime on out here requiring a little intellect; and it is my guess it is how to dispose of Cavendish until they can get away safely with the swag."

"I wonder how this was ever planned out—if it be true?"

"It may have originated in some cunning, criminal brain," he admitted thoughtfully. "Not Beaton's, surely; and, while she is probably much brighter, I am inclined to think the girl is merely acting under orders. There is somebody connected with this scheme higher up—a master criminal."

Miss Donovan was no fool; newspaper work had taught her to suspect men of intellect, and that nothing, however wicked, low or depraved, was beyond them.

"Enright!" she said decidedly. "Obviously now. I've thought so from the first. But always he worked in secret fully, so guardedly, that sometimes I have doubted. But now I say without qualifications—Enright. Smooth Mr. Enright, late of New York."

"That's my bet," Westcott agreed; his hand on her shoulder, forgetful of his intense earnestness. "Enright is the only one who could do it, and he has schemed so as to get John into a hole where he dare not quite expose. No matter what they do him. If they can only succeed in keeping Frederick safely out of sight until after the court awards the property to his heir, they can milk John at their leisure. It's a lawyer's graft, all right."

"Then Frederick may be confined not far away?"

"Likely enough; it's wild country. There are a hundred places within fifty miles where he might be hidden away for years. That is the job which was given to Beaton; he had the dirty work to perform, while the girl took care of John."

Westcott's theory of the situation, his quick decision that Frederick Cavendish still lived, completely overturned Stella's earlier conviction. Yet his argument did not seem unfair or his conclusion impossible. Her newspaper experience had made her aware that there is nothing in this world so strange as its truth, and that nothing is unusual as to be beyond the domain of crime.

"What do you think?" he asked quietly.

"Oh, I do not know; it all grows less comprehensible every moment. But whatever is true I cannot see that anything remains for us to do, but wait and watch the actions of these people; they are certain to betray themselves."

"Well, I am going to busy myself and take a scouting trip to La Rosita."

"Is that Lacy's mine?"

"Yes; up the gulch here about two miles. I am to see you again—alone?"

"We must have some means of communication; have you any suggestion?"

"Yes, but we'll take for our motto: 'Safety first.' We mustn't be seen together, or suspected in any way of being friends. The livery-stable keeper has a boy about twelve, who is quite devoted to me; a bright, trustworthy little fellow. He is about the hotel a good deal, and will bring me word from you any time. You need have no fear that I shall fail to respond to any message you send."

"I shall not doubt." She held out her hand frankly. "You believe in me now, Mr. Westcott?"

FEEDING YOUNG PIGS

Practical Hints for Dealing With the Junior Hog.

Begin With the Mother—Wean When Eight Weeks Old—A Good Ration Suggested — Winter Feeding and Quarters.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Liberal feeding on a well-balanced ration suited to the needs of the sow previous to the birth of the young is very essential if the little pigs are to be worth rearing and the sow in condition to supply ample milk for them. With the sow well nourished and given opportunity for exercise, she is the best equipped individual to undertake the task of rearing a litter. After the little pigs arrive, everything should be done for their comfort and safety if they are to succeed as feeders. Clean, light pens; dry yard or grass lot; abundant sunshine and a well fed mother, usually mean success to the little pigs. When they begin learn to feed at four weeks, provision should be made whereby they can feed at a small trough in an enclosure away from the sow. Small quantities of sweet skimmilk fit which wheat shorts have been mixed should be fed in small quantities and often, feeding a little less than the pigs will normally take. Pigs that have been feeding from the trough for two weeks or more can be weaned without a very serious setback. The longer the pigs can remain with the sow the better it is for them, but such practice is not always profitable, so it is usual to wean the pigs when they are eight weeks old. Since pigs are hunting the ground sirface of rooting for morsels of food, it is good practice to encourage such by scattering plump grain on the floor of the pen or yard. This causes the pig to take the exercise necessary to thrift.

Treatment at Weaning Age.

When the pigs have reached the weaning age of eight weeks, they should be completely separated from the sow. It is better to remove the sow and leave the young pigs in the pen that they have been used to for a week, that their troubles may not all come at once. When the pigs have quite forgotten their mother, an ideal home for them is a colony house situated in an alfalfa, red clover, rape or blue grass pasture yard, where water, a wallow hole and shade are amply supplied. If the young pigs must be kept in the piggery, then everything should be done to provide dryness, protection from pests, a living temperature, ample room, cleanliness, comfort, sunshine and ventilation suited to their needs. Green feeds should form a fair percentage of the total ration for pigs whether fed as a soiling crop or as pasture. The following ration for pigs has proven very satisfactory: Wheat middlings 25 pounds, shorts 25 pounds, finely ground oats 50 pounds, meat meal 5 pounds, meat scrap 5 pounds. Pigs eight weeks old will require a pound or more per day, the quantity required for each day should be set apart and soaked for twelve hours or more, using no more water than is required for the soaking process. When ready to feed use six pounds of skimmilk to each pound of meal. Feed sweet skimmilk until the pigs are well weaned, then change to sour skimmilk and continue to use such as long as possible.

Handling Them at Three Months.

After the pigs are three months old, buttermilk can be used instead of skimmilk with equal advantage. A change in the grain ration is also desirable at this age, and is most easily provided by adding a more fattening grain to the mixture already suggested for the eight weeks old pig. The following is very satisfactory: Corn or barley 25 pounds, shorts 50 pounds, wheat middlings 25 pounds, finely ground oats 50 pounds, oil cake meal 8 pounds. Soaking to soften and thereby increase digestibility should be practiced. The corn or barley portions of the ration should be increased gradually after the fourth month has passed to give the pig an opportunity to fatten during the last two months of its life should it be designed for the block. If intended for breeding purposes the feeding is practically the same up to the fifth month. The intended for breeding purposes' stock should be developed on a ration carrying more bone and muscle forming material than the standard fattening rations. More alfalfa, red clover, sweet clover, rape or blue grass should be used.

Winter Feeding.

The success attained at pig feeding in the winter depends to a greater extent upon the skill of the feeder than does summer feeding when weather conditions are favorable. Comfortable quarters which may be under the strawstack or in an elaborate pen, some place that is dry and will stay dry, is the first necessity. A well balanced ration suited to winter conditions in that it will supply in so far as possible something to take the place of grass and clover and "on the soil" conditions. Roots and sods are the most easily supplied substitutes. Room for exercise, and inducement to take such by scattering whole grain in the litter or feeding ear corn are advised. The well supplied conditioner box is much more necessary during the winter than it is when the pigs are running on the land.

Dampness is the great trouble to overcome. In the modern piggery this is accomplished by abundant glass space in the roof and walls, and elevated platform for sleeping quarters, and ventilators to carry away damp foul air. The pig will keep itself cleaner than any other domestic animal if given freedom to do so.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Harvesting Root Crops.

Roots crop should be taken up before the weather becomes too wet and disagreeable in the fall if in any quantity. It is slow work at any time, and becomes much more so under cold damp conditions. Lift the roots with a digging fork and twist off the tops, putting them in piles and covering with the tops. If a large area is to be lifted, and one is expert with a sharp hoe, he can very quickly remove the tops, but they will not keep quite as well. The roots should be ploughed out, throwing them as much as possible on the top. Bins with slatted sides and bottom should be used for storage where possible, as this gives the roots a chance to sweat. If the storage room temperature is above 40 deg. F., cover them with sand. Carrots should not be deeper than two feet in a bin, beets should be three feet wide, two or three feet high and of any length. Run the pits north and south where possible and have them on well-drained ground. Put a layer of straw on the ground and cover first with straw six inches deep, then six inches of earth, and as the frost gets harder cover with fresh strawy manure. Have ventilators every 15 or 20 feet, as all roots sweat in storage. These may be filled with straw during cold periods.

All roots should be as free from dirt as possible when put in storage. It is often advisable to leave a few days in small piles so that as the second lifting any adhering will be removed.—A. H. MacLennan, O. A. College, Guelph.

Freemartin Heifers.

Twin calves—both of the same sex —will breed with just as much certainty as though they were born singly. When twins are born male and female the female is known as a freemartin and is usually sterile. There have been cases where freemartins have conceived, but they are rare. Probably not over one out of 100 will breed. It is just as unusual for the bull of male and female twins not to breed.

A Good Whitewash.

Slake one-half bushel of fresh lime with boiling water, covering the receptacle to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve, and add seven pounds of fine salt, previously dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice, boiled to a thin paste and stirred in; one pound of white glue, soaked first in cold water until swollen, then carefully melted over fire.

To this mixture add five gallons of hot water and let it stand cover 1 for a few days before using.

ABOUT ENSILAGE CORN

Choose Best Varieties For Live Stock Fodder.

Should Ripen at Least a Few Ears—The Grain Is Nourishing—Frozen Corn Preferred to Immature—Harvesting Root Crops.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The highest grade of corn silage is made from those varieties of corn that produce a large proportion of grain in the total weight of crop. Large growing southern varieties of dent corn that give an immense green weight of fodder per acre will as a rule produce a very poor silage under Ontario conditions. Many dairymen prefer flint varieties and the smaller stalk varieties of early maturing dents for silage purposes. From such a rich sweet silage can be made. The weight per acre may not be nearly as great as with the late maturing large growing dents, but when the silages are compared on the digestible dry matter basis the smaller growing earlier maturing dents and flints have the advantage.

Use Corn Ripening Some Ears.

The experience of the past has shown that only such varieties as will ripen at least a few ears should be used. In early years of our experience in Ontario the practice was to grow big corn. Little attention was paid to the grain yield; much poor silage resulted from the twelve to fourteen-foot stalks that went into the silo without the very necessary two pound well glazed ear. Hard experience has demonstrated that there is more milk, beef or butterfat in a cubic foot of silage made from corn that would bark out one hundred bushels per acre; than from a corn crop that consists of big juicy stalks only.

The Best Varieties.

Golden Glow, Essex Dent, Wisconsin 7, Baily, North Western Dent, Compton's Early, Longfellow, Salzer's North Dakota and King Philip are varieties well suited to Ontario conditions. These varieties will ripen in the southwestern counties of Ontario, and they will generally reach the roasting ear state over the greater part of the dairy section of the Province. The greatest quantity of digestible dry matter is to be obtained from a corn crop when it has reached the condition to cut for husking, ripe enough to complete maturity in the shock. Another advantage in growing the earlier maturing varieties is that such can be enslied early in September and the land prepared for autumn wheat, an important factor now that the European Corn Borer has become a menace to corn growing.

Frozen Corn Preferred to Immature.

The freezing of corn after it has reached the denting or early glazing stage does not materially injure in so far as silage making goes. It is always advisable to run the risk of frost, rather than enslie the corn in an immature state.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Efficient Threshing Hints.

A few points to keep in mind for efficient threshing are: uniform feeding, not too rapid feeding, constant speed of the machine, and proper adjustment. Many times when a thresherman is anxious to complete his job, the work is rushed through at considerable loss to the owner of the grain. Greater personal interest in each job usually makes the small threshing outfit more desirable than the large one. With the large outfit a part of the crew is usually a long distance from home and they do not have the same interest in the work as when the entire crew is made up of men on adjacent farms.

Feeding the Brood Sow.

The brood sow that breaks bounds and goes foraging on her own account and on behalf of the litter is usually well worth considering as a breeding proposition. It will pay to provide her with some of the fallen apples, vegetables and green stuff that she craves.

OUR NEIGHBOURS' CROPS

Big Returns In U. S., and New Record for Wheat.

A corn crop of 2,875,000,000 bushels is forecast in the latest crop report for the United States. The August forecast was 3,017,000,000 bushels. Drought was the principal reason for reduced prospects. The reduction was general, but was particularly noticeable in South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Kentucky and Tennessee. In Iowa, the leading corn state, the forecast increased by 18,000,000 bushels to 432,000,000 bushels, which is 15 per cent. of the prospective crop of all states. The forecast of 2,875,000,000 bushels for Septembebr compares with the harvested crop of 3,080,000,000 bushels last year, and a five-year average of 2,831,000,000 bushels.

The spring wheat forecast indicates a production of 277,000,000 bushels, a gain of 14,000,000 bushels over the August forecast. The winter wheat forecast of 542,000,000 bushels for August is unchanged, and hence a total wheat crop of 818,000,000 bushels is predicted. This compares with 795,000,000 bushels last year and the five-year average of 799,000,000 bushels. For the two wheat crops combined the average yield per acre is 14.4 bushels. Last year it was 13.7 bushels, and the five-year average is 13.7 bushels.

Although the condition of the oats crop declined slightly during August, 1,255,000,000 bushels is now forecasted. This compares with last year's crop of 1,061,000,000 bushels, and a five-year average of 1,418,000,000 bushels.

The barley forecast of production for September 193,850,000 bushels — gained slightly over the August forecast of 191,507,000 bushels. The month of August was hot, dry and unfavorable for growing crops, but was favorable for the harvesting of the small grain crops which had already reached maturity.

In spite of very dry weather in August, the potato crop promise is holding up fairly well. The September forecast of production was 438,-893,000 bushels, or about 1,500,000 bushels less than the August forecast. The principal changes during the month were reductions of nearly 4,000,000 bushels in Maine, 2,000,000 bushels in Minnesota, and 1,000,000 bushels in North Dakota, and gains of 2,000,000 bushels in New York and 1,000,000 bushels in Washington. The present forecast of 438,398,000 bushels compares with a production of 347,000,000 bushels last year, and a five-year average of 373,000,000 bushels. The largest production ever reported was 442,-000,000 bushels in 1918.

The 1922 estimated production of hay is 109,000,000 tons (93,000,000 tame and 16,000,000 wild). It means a liberal supply for the season, last year's crop being 97,000,000 tons, and the average of the preceding five years being 102,000,000 tons. The production this year is less than last year's in the far Western States, including Colorado, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, but larger than last year's in most other sections, particularly in the Nor'y Atlantic and North Central States.

Flax and Wheat.

Although the practice has not been tried out to any extent in other localities, farmers in parts of North Dakota and Minnesota have been growing flax and wheat together as a mixed crop for several years. Results generally have been satisfactory, and a meeting of agricultural experts and officials was held recently to discuss this new combination crop.

The investigation, according to the Nor'-West Farmer, has proved that many beneficial results are obtained by seeding flax with wheat, one of which is that the crop handles well in cutting, makes a perfect bundle for stacking, and threshes perfectly as compared with the growing harvesting and threshing of the clear flax.

Farmers who have pursued the practice have found that in growing the mixture the yield is usually as much flax per acre as when it is grown separately, while the wheat, which is an additional return, the only extra labor involved being the separation of the two grains after threshing, which is a very simple matter. It would seem also that the mixed crop is composed of grain of very high quality, and the wheat can be sold as a rule at a premium for seed.

Alaska's University.

When a man who is a "born leader" goes into a new country he must develop versatility or get out. For example, John Bunnell went up to Upper Canada to open a school, but found no opportunity to do so until forty years later, when he did found Trinity College. Adapting himself to the circumstances, young Strachan passed the intervening generation very busily in creating a church, and schoolmaster he became priest and bishop.

Similarly, Charles E. Bunnell went to Alaska to serve as circuit judge. He spent the first seven years in Alaska, northern terminus of the newly-constructed Alaskan Railway. The new president held his first commencement recently and it was a real commencement, not an annual closing miscalled "commencement day."

Having traveled by canoe and dog train and any other old way up and down the vast territory for seven years, Mr. Bunnell left off skirting off with any fads and frills. He knows the needs and so the Alaska School of Mines will be the nucleus of the greater university, its campus located under the aurora borealis and the midnight sun, its buildings rising crudely but hopefully in the bush and rock, its students few but sturdy and its president young and hopeful.

Beet Top Silage for Ewes.

Beet top silage will increase the flow of milk of ewes at lambing time. It is best to start feeding only about one pound per head daily and gradually to increase the quantity to three pounds per day. The udder may become feverish if this caution is not observed.

DUDS FOR FALL HAVE THE CALL

Milady Contemplates the Cool Breezes When Choosing Any New Clothes.

SKIRTS LONGER AND WIDER

Although Garment Has Not Reached Any Ultra Length, It Is Persistently Reaching Down Toward the Ground.

Whoever is buying dresses and suits now is buying them for fall. Summer has passed out of our calculations, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times, as far as any purchases are concerned. To be sure, we are still wearing our summer clothes and glad we are to have them, too. But when we have to find any new frocks, why, then, of course, we are looking forward to another season, and are buying all necessary things with a view to wearing them on through months that are cooler. We say to ourselves: "Whatever I have now shall be suited for a more salubrious clime and never again shall I consider these flaming hours of the present. I am contemplating cool breezes and therefore, my clothes being ready, they must find me sooner or later."

Just now Paris is in the throes of having its openings. The new styles are being divulged to the buyers and lookers-on who are enjoying the showing in the midst of the heat. Those models will take some more weeks in which to filter through to this country to make their impression and their inevitable mark upon the styles which are our own. But for the actual present, we have some advance Parisian suits and dresses that show what the designers are doing in the way of foretelling the modes to come.

The ones that have been sent are most conservative in character, but, after all, isn't that the way of the truly French woman? She wishes to be conservative always while at the same time she is living up to all of the pre-established standards of a seasonable change in fashion. She is always smart, but she is never-ultra-evidently fashionable. She maintains her own character while she bows to fashion's ways. She is an artist in all that she does in the way of dress, and it is by studying her technique and her manner of dress that we are able to learn for ourselves in the way of perfecting our own attire.

Suits First in Favor.

Suits are the first things in the way of fall clothes that really strike into the soul of a woman. She must have something for street wear—and that as soon as the cooler days arrive. As a matter of fact, even while it is still hot, she begins to think of besides suits, if only to steer herself ahead by purchasing a new fall suit she can hurry along more comfortable living weather, then that is what she wishes to do and, at any rate, she can make herself believe that she is approaching more nearly more livable weather.

There are two interesting suits, both made along somewhat the same lines with that long, full-length jacket that has been so popular in Paris all summer and the short, straight pepplum added to that for a finish.

One suit has more of fanciness than the other one, but then that is a way the French designers have. They love to introduce a few plaits and some embroidery pins inserted or appliqued material in order to pull the suit out of the strictly tailored class. They can no more bear to leave that suit untrimmed by some slight fixing that they can attempt to make a dress these days without side flounces and pane tags. They must have their suits classed among the more informal articles of apparel before they can be truly satisfied with their appearance.

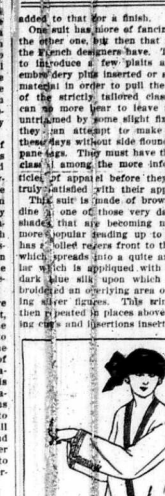
This suit is made of brown gabardine in one of those very darkest of shades that are becoming more and more popular trading up to fall. It has a rolled revers front to the jacket which spreads into a quite ample collar which is equipped with a bit of dark blue silk upon which are embroidered an overlying area of glistening silver figures. This trimming is then repeated in places above the flaring cuffs and insertions inserted under the all-over blue and lifts the suit into that more informal class where the woman dressing for the approaching season will be happiest in her street clothes.

At the neckline there is no suggestion of a collar, the coat being quite flat against the throat. This gives a happy opportunity for the wearing of a little fur animal if the plainness of the line against one's skin does not happen to be extraordinarily becoming.

Beige and Sister Shades.

Beige and many of the sister shades will be found to be an exceedingly good choice for fall, especially for those who have tired of, or who never did really care for, the eternal blacks and blues which women love to wear for street or afternoon. Then, when you add to the light tan shades something like jade with a touch of brightness, you are sure to gain an effect which will lift your frock out of the class of the usual, as much by reason of its coloring as by its cut and shaping.

It has been proved that, with these flowing gowns, the larger and more flowing hats are those that are most desirable, becoming and effective.



Brown Serge With Embroidery.

the arms and above the low-lying belt. There are pockets on the narrow peplum made of series of folds and finished by little rows of decorative buttons attuned by their design and coloring to the harmony of the rest of the costume.

Flare Determines Skirt Length.

The skirts of these suits are quite plain, with only enough fulness allowed them to make them ample as to fit and hang. They are neither too loose for too tight, but they have the happy faculty of carrying out the line of the coat perfectly and to the last degree of design. They are long. Yes, all of the newest skirts are longer than they were and though these have not reached any ultra length, they are definitely drawing down toward the ground with recognizable persistency.

There is much to be said in this matter of skirts with reference to proportion. Much depends upon the individual's personal shape of the individual who wears them. The skirts take their length and lines from a preestablished contour of individual figure. They are subject to a harmonious adjustment with reference to other details of the costume and the purpose for which it is being worn.

Another little, long-waisted short coat is the latest development in dark blue serge. You know it is perfectly impossible for us to face a new season without some characteristic development having made itself felt in this standby material, this favorable fabric for all women whose wardrobes must be called upon to suit many occasions and many times.

With the blue serge suit this season, if we are to listen to the French, will be softer even than usual, and it will have many points of interest usually more characteristic of the dress than the suit. As shown in newer models, the coats will be long-waisted and there will be some sort of trimming that will help to enliven the general appearance of the costume, keeping it, at the same time, strictly tailored in design, or if not strictly, almost so.

Sleeves for suit coats will often be wide, so that they add that one atom of grace at a point where it is most desirable according to the present styles.

Now, the decoration on the serge suit described is done with a very fine embroidery of red and blue beads. Then, she coat is lined with a soft bit of red crepe toning into the shading of the red beads. This makes a happy, if eminently inconspicuous, addition to

NEW LIGHT WOOL

Material of Crepe Weave Used for Hand-Made Dresses.

Novelty Is Lighter in Weight Than Many Crepe De Chines and Suitable for Gowns.

The styles brought out at this time of the year in a very large measure predate the fashions of the coming autumn. Women have proved that their tastes in dress are simple, for the multitude of ideas constantly launched, and many of them pushed to the utmost, those embodying simplicity invariably take a firm hold. The greatest successes known in the history of dressmaking have been made in recent years by designers who worked along these lines. Those who have eschewed complication and held to an almost stern simplicity have been the ones whose models have had the greatest vitality and endurance.

No stronger current has run through the stream of fashions during the last few years than the Vionnet genius of the type of which a writer in the New York Tribune. It never can be said of Vionnet's models that they definitely date themselves, as do most fashions that rage for a time. They are simply artistic and refining and no one can deny that they are enduring. Women who have become accustomed to this type of dress continue from season to season to have a similar thing, and often ordering a material, have the same style copied two or three times, the only difference being in the color.

In materials, crepe de chins and crepe romaine are still favorites, but they have a new ally in a very lightweight wool material of crepe weave, which is now being used for handmade dresses of the sort that have been so popular in crepe de chine, voile and handkerchief linen. These show draws work and Venetian ladder embroidery.

It seems a contrariety that dressmakers should manifest so strong an interest in woolen materials at a season of the year when the mercury stands at its highest, but this novelty woolen is lighter in weight than many crepe de chines and is particularly suitable for dresses being made up at this time. It hinkes delightful frocks for morning, afternoon and evening, and models made from this fine wool crepe need not be packed away for another season when one comes back to town, but will be found very serviceable throughout the autumn and winter.

DISCREET COLORS IN PLAIDS

Brown Is Leader for Daytime Wear; Blue Stands Out as Marked Shade for the Year.

Plaids in discreet colorings are featured for outdoor and tailored wear. English mixtures and wools in mixed colorings are strong for all tailored garments. Brown as the great leader for daytime wear, in all shades from dark tete de negre to fawn. Green is being pushed by many of the manufacturers, in intense shades, also in reseda and dark myrtle.

In silks, as in woolens, for day wear, brown, green and black are good. For evening, all the shades with a reddish base, such as flame pink, orange and purples, are favored.

Blue in bright tones, on the order of king's blue and blue with a gray base, of the Copenhagen family, also are favored. Bright blue, in fact, stands out as the marked color note for the year, but used chiefly as a decoration, or in combination with black.

WELCOME, WINTRY WINDS ?

What did you do with your summer's dough ?
It's gone ; and you hate to tell.
Soon we'll have both hail and snow.
It sure would make one yell.
But ! we should worry ! let it come,
The wintry winds we'll greet.
For we were shod at the Hospital
And we shall have dry feet.
Hog ! Dog ! nor devil, do we fear,
For our understanding's good ;
Our sox are dry, our feet are glad,
We did as wise fool's should.

Messrs. Horace E. Negus and Lawrence MacDuff, of Amherst, Nova Scotia, were in town on Sunday on their tour from Amherst to Vancouver, B.C. These two young men are called barrel rollers, for the reason that each man rolls a barrel in front of him or draws it behind him by means of a handle.

The football game staged at the driving park on Wednesday afternoon in aid of the Hallowbury fire sufferers, ended with a score of 3 for the Strollers and 1 for the Collegiate. The weather was bad, with a very high wind, which no doubt kept many away from the game and reduced the amount raised for the fire sufferers.

On Sunday afternoon a Chevrolet Sedan, driven by Miss Miller, of Kingston, while turning the corner at Dundas and West streets was run into by a Chevrolet car owned by a man from Belleville. The sedan had the running board and fenders on the left side smashed up and several spokes broken in one rear wheel. The Belleville car had the front fenders crumpled up.

A man in Montreal has been fined for selling a pound of butter in which there was 25 per cent. of cocoanut oil, and it is reported that there are 29 other cases to be brought up of the same sort. The point was made by counsel that the oil was not injurious, but lacked growth. It only decided that that was not the question, but that the butter was adulterated. It would be a jolly state of things if people were allowed to mix in any old thing with butter and other food commodities so long as they were not injurious. And moreover, the counsel for the crown stated that while cocoanut oil was worth 9 cents a pound, butterfat was selling for 30.

Sportsmen and the lovers of outdoors ought to find a lot of solid pleasure in their perusal of the November issue of ROD AND GUN IN CANADA. The usual collection of stories, articles and features is not only extensive and generous, as usual, but it is of particularly high quality as well. Raymond Thompson is the author of a thrilling tale, entitled, "The Scourge of God," while "Mala-waska" is a charmingly illustrated article that is full of interest. The departments are all attractive and well-balanced. A feature is a complete table of the trapping laws of the provinces of the dominion, while the Trap Line Department, edited by M. U. Bates, offers a wealth of valuable information which the trapper will not want to miss.

ABOUT ALEXANDER

There was a youth who loved a maid,
His name was Alexander ;
He wanted her to marry him—
A ring did Alex-hand her.
So later, they were truly wed,
And when the folks the paper read,
Referring to the twain they said,
"Why, there goes Alex-and-her."

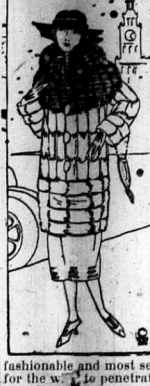
THE ROBINSON COMPANY, Limited.

FURS OF REGAL BEAUTY AND CHARM NOW AWAIT YOUR CHOOSING



Elegance, beauty and warmth are admirably expressed in the new 1922-23 coat styles. The collars are luxuriously large, and in so many instances are of contrasting furs. The pelts from which our various coats have been made are unquestionable rich in quality. Further richness has been added by the use of very picturesque and serviceable linings. Little new is found in style lines. The average coat being medium long, loose and graceful. Collar and sleeves are alike large..

Hudson Seal, while conceding some of the honors to Persian Lamb, is nevertheless very fashionable. This beautiful fur when made from deeply furred and properly matched skins does present a most handsome appearance, and is at the same time very serviceable. We are featuring this coat in all Seal and Sable trimmed models. Priced from $325.00 to $395.00.

Persian Lamb, with deep Alaska Sable collar and cuffs, also makes another interesting model. It is fashionable and most serviceable, while it is almost impossible for the w[illegible] to penetrate through the thickness of the skins.

For [illegible] younger women" Muskrat and Coon make wonderful coats. These are fashioned on very swagger lines featuring in [illegible] instances dropped skin collars and reverse borders.

All of our coats are priced well in keeping with market conditions. We will guarantee you cannot do better in quality, style, or price.

Seven patterns to make a selection from. All new designs. The prices range from $9.00 to $18.00.

THE SEASON FOR IN-DOOR AMUSEMENTS IS HERE YOU WILL BE NEEDING MANY FROCKS

Sufficient supply of dress changes will enable you to accept all of your invitations. True, you must have appropriate gowns for various functions, and if is equally true that every gown must be right up to the minute in style and material.

From our present assortment of dresses you will find numbers that will answer your every requirements from the most informal afternoon cup of tea to the most elaborate evening affair.

This season dress creators in Paris and New York have chosen "Canton Crepe" and made it the most fashionable of all materials. Crepe de Chene and Rusbanro Crepe are also popular and practical.

Straight-line silhouettes again predominate. Sometimes an elastic waist-line is used, or perhaps the length is emphasized by rows of narrow pleats running full length of the dress, and extending below the hem line ; quite frequently drapes adorn the skirt while the bodice is severely plain. The various neck-lines are interesting. Sleeves are various lengths. Beading is used on some frocks for ornamentation, embroidery on others. Color combinations are also good. Radium laces are extremely proper.

Navy, brown and black are leading shades.

All are moderately priced.

AS HOMESPUNS ARE EXTREMELY POPULAR, OUR CHOICE ASSORTMENT WILL MEET YOUR REQUIREMENTS

A leading value, 54 inches wide, $1.65.
